Still remaining in the city.

There is again a hurried exodus. It is now estimated that from $0,000 to $250,000 people are flocking through the whole of yesterday, increasing tremendously in fury toward $5 o'clock in the afternoon. Enormous damage has been done in the southern quarter of the city, the German shells spreading fire and death over a large area. One of the shells exploded near the cathedral, which, however, has been only slightly damaged so far. Other shells set fire to the great oil tanks near the river bank and the flames spread till the oil from fifty or more of the reservoirs was ablase. The farmost of the great buildings have been intact.

conditions throughout the country are improving, according to reports reaching President Wilson today, and Democratic speakers are to be instructed to dwell on this fact during the fall campaigns in answer to the expected charges by Republicans and "Progressives" that the new tariff has brought financial disaster.

The President was informed many orders for American goods were being received from abroad and that the first bad effects of the European war on American industry had passed.

As a part of the Democratic campaign the President probably will issue a statement when he signs the Clayton anti-trust bill, now before him, calling attention to the completion of the programme of trust legislation started with the passage of the trade commission bill.

Mr. Wilson has decided also to accept an invitation to speak in Pittaburgh on October 24 on the seventieth anniversary of the founding of the Y.M.C.A. While he will not make a political speech, he will go at the invitation of Representative Palmer, candidate for Senator, and his appearance is planned to assist Mr. Palmer.

that cannot but affect deleteriously our financial and commercial relations. That agitation should be curbed. Reports that your government is to take steps should be stopped. I state the case plainly. The gravity of the fluation cannot be overrestimated. "Let me state the points of view concerning which all British subjects are one. We would welcome peace tomorrow, for our people truly love peace, and the war is costing us dearly, but peace tomorrow would mean war the day after tomorrow. Dreadful as this conflict is, there can be no cessation until Prussian militarism is destroyed and the nations, Germany as well as the allies, are left free to pursue the proper activities of civilization.

tions, Germany as well as the allies, are left free to pursue the proper activities of civilization. If we made peace now, Germany would merely hide her time until a new opportunity arose to set the world ablaze. Such peace would be as futile, as ghastly a farce, as were peace treaties of the twenty years before Napoleon was crushed.

"Permit me to add that England was crushed.
"Permit me to add that England believes Germany beaten now. The crest of German military power has been reached. Will not Americans comprehend, therefore, that mediation offers, peace proposals of any sort, are deliberately launched for the purpose of saving Germany from the hu-

NEW YORK, Oct 9.—Capt. Coleman, who arrived on the Lustania, which docked today, gave a statement to the New York City News Association, which quoted him as saying that his observations and information, obtained from soldiers of the allied armies, led to the conclusion that the so-called German atrocities were the result of orders from higher military authorities and not the work of individuals.

authorities and not the work of individuals.

"Following the retreat of the army of Gen. Von Kluck, the Uhlans returned to the field," Capt. Coleman is quoted as saying. "They turned their machine guns on the wounded lying everywhere, killing them almost to a man. They trod on other wounded men, who, if they groaned, were shot without pity."

Capt. Coleman is then credited with saying that this story was told to him by a wounded French soldier, who had been through the experience, but who did not die after being shot.

The First Time During Any World's Series that the Athletics Have Been Forced to Bench a Pitcher. Rudolph's Brilliant Game for the Braves-Boston Fans Wore Indian Feathers and Did Snake Dances.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

PHILADELPHIA, Oct. 9.—Playing with the same sensational speed that marked their rush from last place to the position of pennant-winners in the National League, the Boston Braves crushed the Philadelphia Americans here today in the first game of the world's series by a score of seven runs to one. Although the newly-constructed baseball machine of "Miracle Man" Stallings wabbled once or twice, it never left the track, and under the guiding hand of Pitcher" under the guiding hand of Pitcher Rudolph crashed through Connie Mack's champion Athletics, scattering Athletics totter and then collapse un-

Mack's champion Athletics, scattering dismay and disappointment in its trail.

NOT LUCK.

The victory over the 2-to-1 American League favorites was well won, no lucky breaks or baseball flukes figuring in the defeat of the famous Mackmen clan. By sharp, heavy and timely hitting the Braves piled up an offensive lead, which, coupled with Rudolph's sterling box work and the general defense of his team-mates, leading the picker, to the bench, a feat no other series.

THE CROWD.

The Braves were first to score, putting two runs across in the second inning. Whitted waiked and scored on Gowdy's double, who in turn came home on Maranville's drive to left center. The Athletics came back with a run in their half of the same inning, when McInnis was passed, and scored on Strunk's single, which Moran let slip through his fingers for three bases. In the fifth Gowdy tripled to center and came home on Maranville's short hit over McInnis's head. Boston cllinched the game in the next inning, scoring three runs on Evers's single, Connolly's pass, Whitted's triple to right and Schmidt's single, which was too hot for Barry to hold.

Just to show that they could hit other pitchers besides Bender, the Braves added another off Wyckoff in the eighth when Schmidt singled, went to third on Gowdy's one-base slash, and stole home as Maranville fanned.

SHEER ABILITY.

They had every reason to be elated, when, aside from the cold figures, the opening victory of the world's series of 1914 shows that the National League representatives were superior, both collectively and individually, in each department of the game except fielding, where two errors were charged against the Braves, while not a single misplay marred the work of the Athletics. MACK PREDICTS A HARD SERIES.

After the contest Manager Mack said that Bender did not seem to be right and that he had little or nothing on the ball. Mack pointed out that the Athletics did little work with the stick themselves, and said that while he looked forward to a hard series, he and his players were not a bit discouraged over the initial setback. He was asked if he thought his club would hit any better against the other Boston pitchers, and came back with the characteris-

	Chame defeat to Hughes: 1 run. 3 hits. 23

The Boston batters hit wickedly in practice. Tom Hughes served up the balls and the "Royal Rooters" from Boston sent up a loud shout when Gowdy drove the ball into the stands. The Boston Braves were first on the diamond for field practice. Their work was clean and brilliant. Maranville was all over the midfield section, scooping grounders to his right and left and making throws from every position. The crowd applauded him frequently.

The National Sunday Magazine

SUNDAY, OCTOBER 18th

Notable among the contributors who give timely and extraordinary interest to the next issue of our NATIONAL SUNDAY MAGAZINE (Semi-Monthly Magazine Section of The Times) are Secretary of War Lindley M. Garrison, the Ambassadors to the United States from Great Britain, Germany, Austria-Hungary and Russia, besides such celebrated authors and artists as John Fleming Wilson, George Barr McCutcheon, Ethel Watts Mumford, J. N. Marchand and R. F. Schabelitz.

GREAT STAKES IN BATTLE SCALES

The War and Why—A Symposium. By the Ambassadors to the United States of the Powers at War

Defining the causes and consequences of the great war in Europe, British Ambassador, Sir Cecil-Spring Rice, German Ambassador, Count von Bernstorff, Austro-Hungarian Ambassador Dr. Constantin Dumba, and Russian Ambassador, M. George Bakhmeteff, make important statements that will appear exclusively in THE NATIONAL SUNDAY MAGAZINE. Each one justifies the war from the viewpoint of his own government and leaves it to the people of the United States to decide whether they would prefer the allies or the Austro-Germans to triumph.

THE ARMY AS AN INVESTMENT Editorial By Lindley M. Garrison, Secretary of War

Secretary Garrison believes that our standing army of 100,000 men is the best investment, simply from a business view-point, that the American people could possibly make—and he backs his strong argument with some highly illuminative facts. Not only has the army engineered the building of the Panama Canal but has paid for itself in many other

FIVE-FOOT-TEN FROM KANSAS Short Story By John Fleming Wilson Illustrated by J. N. Marchand

In three thousand words the author of this remarkable story has put more human drama, more thrill and action, than usually distinguishes a best selling novel. It's a haunting tale—the kind that refuses to be forgotten.

THE WINNING OF YOLANDE Short Story By Ethel Watts Mumford Illustrated by F. A. Furman

In this concluding adventure, Cupid and the Chaperon, the scene is laid in Paris, just prior to the war, and despite the efforts of the vigilant Chaperon, Miss Yolande Folsom, rich, bewitching and American, is besieged by the forces of Cupid. The engagement is thrilling—the defeat of the Chaperon becomes a rout. A charming, spirited story of love in time of war.

> THE PRINCE OF GRAUSTARK Serial Story By George Barr McCutcheon Illustrated by R. F. Schabelitz

"What will my dear single old dad say if I marry this man after all?" mused Bedelia Guile that night at Interlaken. In a window not ten feet away, the Prince of Graustark was staring into the night, with lowering eyes and troubled heart, and in his mind he was saying: "What will my people do if I marry this woman after all?" So this strong, clean romance moves swiftly toward its conclusion-and the next installment makes the solution of the riddle more perplexing than ever. Who can Bedelia Guile be?

"Can We See a Honeymoon, Mister?"

is the title of the cover design in colors that Alfred James Dewey has drawn for the next number of THE NATIONAL SUNDAY MAGAZINE. This fetching picture in itself is as good as a story.

U. S. Naval Vessels S Excerts for Interned German Stee er to Boston Harbor. [BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

WASHINGTON, Oct. 9 .- The conemplated trip of the interned German liner Kronprinzessin Cecilie from Bar Harbor, Me., to winter quarters in Boston Harbor may be made under a convoy of United States naval ves-sels. The warships would go as scouts, sels. The warships would go as seouts, however, merely to warn the captain of the liner should British or other cruisers put in an appearance while the Ceclie was outside the three-mile limit, permitting her to hasten toward shore and avoid capture.

The suggestion was made at the State Department today; but it may prove an unnecessary precaution. It is believed that no objection will be offered to the trip by the British Foreign Office if the matter were laid before it, and that course probably will be taken to avoid all possibility of raising the question of the right of the belilgerent powers to interfer with a vessel in the peculiar status of the German liner.

The arrest was made by Patrolmen Baines and Wallace, who discovered the trio near the Los Angeles Gas Company tanks at Seventh and Alameda streets.

"My husband," declared Mrs. Northup, "has been out of work for many months. My cousin Brown also has been unable to find work in or about Los Angeles. For some time we have not had enough to eat, and yesterday we three made up our minds to walk to Denver, where my husband has friends. I was not afraid to try the long walk, and my husband got these clothes for me because it would help me in walkins."

Patrolmen Baines and Wallace last night declared that if the story told by the trio be proved true they will be released from jail and allowed to continue their trip. Mrs. Northup will be asked, however, to wear her own clothing.

To attack it once more a samost incredibly stupid: but that's what the Socialist plotters say they are going to do.

The facts concerning the ownership and development of the valley have been stated again and again. There is no concealment—never has been any—is no cocasion for any. The lands in the valley, from one end to the other, are owned by many hundreds of owners. There is no monopoly and no chance for any.

The San Fernando Valley is forging right ahead, attracting new settlers and new owners. One thing is sures. Job Harriman's scandal-breeding, money-losing colonisation scheme is not located there, and there is not a fake enterprise in the valley. No fak-ers need apply.

Hurt by Runaway.
Leaving in their wake hundreds of broken milk bottles, a pair of runaway horses hitched to a Eureka Dairy milk wagon early last night piled two small boys, Pat Walters, the driver, as well as the wagon, against a telegraph pole at Avenue 26 and the Salt Lake tracks.
The two boys, Anthony Stabenau,
13 years old, of No. 525 lanbel street, and Conrad Seymanski, 14 years of age, of No. 639 lanbel street, both in an unconsclous condition, were taken to the Receiving Hospital, while Mr.
Walters received attention from a private physician. The wagon was wrecked.
According to the story told by the boys, the horses became frightened when an automobile passed the wagon at high speed. The driver and the boys, who were all inside the closed wagon, were unable to spring to the ground, and were forced to remain aboard until the vehicle was wrecked against the pole.

INVESTIGATING HISTORY KILLED CHIEF.

The record of the tramp in the fanford jail who gives his name as James Brown and who, believing himself fatally wounded in a duel with a Santa Fe "train rider" near Harlow station, said he had killed Chief of Police Sullivan of Spokane four years ago, will be traced. C. Selvy, chief special agent of the railroad, yesterday said that pictures, finger prints and Bertillon measurements of the prisoner will be taken and circulated throughout the West.

In this way it is believed that Brown's real identity will be established. C. E. Rothenhoefer, Mr. Selvy's chief assistant, who is handling the case for the railroad, expects the information will divulge that the man is wanted elsewhere. In the meantime Brown will be held and tried for assault to murder. ames Brown and who, believing him-time Brown will be held and tried for assault to murder.

Chief Sullivan was shot in the back as he sat in his home, January 5, 1911. No clew was left, but the supposition was strong that a member of the I.W.W., which felt a grievance against the police of Spokane because of strict enforcement of the law, was the slayer. Brown is a teamster and tadmits he was in Spokane at the time and fad I.W.W. leanings. The Spokane police are tracing his movements while living in the Washington city.

EXTRAVAGANCE OF THE JOHNSON ADMINISTRATION.

There are so many instances of extravagance and injudicious expenditures on the part of the present State administra-tion that it is not possible to call attention to all of them at one sitting.

The fact that it has cost the Johnson dministration $33,317,599 to conduct the isiness of California for four years is efficient evidence of waste and pocket-

Under Gov. Gillett the State appropriations were abnormally large, owing to the necessity of rehabilitating and reconstructing State property destroyed or damaged in the earthquake and fire of 1906.

There have been no great and useful expenditures under the Johnson administration-as there were under the Gillett administration-rendered necessary by destruction for which no man was responsible. Yet the Johnson administration has cost the State $8,390,436 more than did the Gillett administration with all of its abnor-

(Abroad:) It was announced in Paris hat between September 15 and October 5 the issue of war bonds by France has mounted to $43,550,400, most of which has seen taken by the people of that country. (For developments see financial page.) the State hospitals for the insane under Gillett (including the appropriation of about $1,000,000 to rebuild the Napa Insane Asylum which had been destroyed by fire) was increase of over $1,400,000. Considering the $1,000,000 spent for reconstruction under Gillett-an expense that Johnson has not had to meet-it may accurately be said that the expense of the insane hospitals alone has increased $2,400,000.

And in spite of this enormous increase in running expenditures, a noisome scandal originated at Napa which aired the fact that the inmates were being poorly fed, poorly attended and mistreated.

In 1909 the appropriation for the State legislative department was $197,700. Under the Johnson administration the appropriation in 1913 was $339,400.

In 1909 there was no Stafe Board of Contween Villa and Carranza and this may avert further hoatilities along the border. All that Carranza wishes is permission to leave Mexico. The chances are indeed favorable that Villa and himself can agree.

In 1909 there was no Stafe Board of Control, but a State Board of Examiners effectively did the work necessary, and it required an appropriation of $44.760. Under the Johnson administration the appropriation for the State Board of Control in 1913 was $182,700.

In 1909 an appropriation of $56,760 was point of ethics. We will watch to see whether the professor gets tures of the State Capitol and grounds department. In 1913, although the personal control of the State Capitol and grounds had been taken from the Secretary of State and given to the Governor, an appropriation of $211,695 was required.

A Detroit man broke into fall and rePLATONIC REGARD.

BY ALMA WHITAKER. One of the best definitions of love is that:
"Tis a torment and a treasure—

Having it, no peace;
Lacking it, no pleasure."
Lacking it, no pleasure."
Lacking it, no pleasure."
So naturally a great many people have tried to compromise with piatonic regard.
Some peace, a soupcon of pleasure, the minimum of torment and possibly some

But that cynical old rascal Shenstone has declared that platonic love is only possible when the man loves more than the woman. And the very sweetest and most womanly woman I know says it isn't possible at all. Argonant last week. He, you see, was very indignant because she stopped him in the middle of a sentimental sentence and said that all she could offer him was a platonic regard. And that was all he was going to offer her! No wonder he was mad. And there was a sly little joke in the

It must be confessed that platonic regard It must be confessed that platonic regard isn't quite as fashionable as it was. They don't recognize it at all in society. The new golf champion of the Coast declares that he is amazed at the persistence with which the theatrical profession insists upon trying matrimony. But they have to, poor dears. It's the only way they can have a friend of the opposite sex and still remain respectable—and the theatrical profession has long been ambitious to set the standard in respectability. The De Wolf Hoppers and the Nat Goodwins are sufficient evidence of this.

Temporary matrimony seemed to be the only possible alternative. It's such a wick-

Platonic regard is a charming ideal, but any of us who seriously study the question are confronted with the fact that Plato was quite an old man before he wrote the famous dialogue which is the only one of his vast output of philosophic essays that he is likely to be remembered by.

All the same, reviewing the many marriages that are taking place, one realizes that the bulk of them are based upon pla-tonic regard. Good oid-fashioned terrific love affairs of the sweeping order are rare. When the man loves more than the woman he generally marries her. When the wom-an loves more than the man it's irksome and he doesn't. Not if he can escape

The woman generally explains the mar-riage by declaring that she respects him. But in a general way she doesn't—much. And platonic regard doesn't sound a sufficiently good reason for marrying him, especially as she knows very well it isn't going to be like that at all. Not for some time, at all events.

Yet the average woman would really pre-fer to marry for love. Those old novels and melodramas wherein the beautiful heroine sacrificed all for love and married the pengliess hero in spite of all were based upon probabilities, although of course the author who knew his business was careful to arrange a windfall for the hero-in the

After all, every woman should be entitled to a romance and a husband, preferably in the same person. But few of us realize how very rarely the right man falls in love with us. We so often have the option of marrying the wrong man—or sipping the joys of platonic regard. Which, of course, is very elevating, ennobling, pleasant and New York was called upon to export and did export $84,000,000 in gold before the war cloud burst, and to this it added $46.

000,000 for American securities which Eustitutes still. One can readily realize why society declines to recognize platonics, why they have no social standing whatsoever. Society likes to be positive.

Once one is within the sacred realms of society they will recognize pretty well anything but platonics. Of course the gentle-No account has been published of the men and ladies on the fringe or just outside must conform absolutely to the conventions or be damned; but those inside, providing they are artistic about it, can put over anything but platonics. nothing of the courtship of the wild roose, but we feel assured that it must tack with beak and wings. This guardianship is trebled when the new generation, helpless and dependent, voices its first need for protection from the perlis which encompass and beset it. If, perchance, the small afamily elects to remain on the shore, the parents will circle round and round the group of golden goslings; and if danger threatens from any one direction, the gander, by some miracle of strategy, will succeed in placing himself at the one vulnerable point of his intrenchment. His loyalty, astuteness and unselishness are not to be found in those unobservant folk, who have presumed to slander him. In swimming, the strictest discipline is maintained. The young form in single file, following the mother, while the gander brings up the rear, with eyes constantly sweeping the whole range of vision. His vigil is ceaseless and untiring. Such is the life of these two birds who are mated in more than sex; and when death comes to one or the other of them, we know that, many times, the one who remains will seek no other mate, but will return each spring to the site of his former nest, which he will never renew again.

BAR SCHOOL JOY RIDES.
[IGOAL CORRESPONDENCE]

ANAHEIM, Oct. 9.—The faculty of the Anaheim Union High School will not allow any more joy rides among the students when they attend social features of the school. This announcement was made at a meeting of the student body, and if the students do not observe the new rule they will be barred from attending any of the affairs of the school. The teachers stated that their students must remain in the school building until the close of the programme or any meeting of the school, and then return to their homes. This new movement was applauded by many, while others stated that the "high school is not a kindergarten."

WHITTIER'S GROWTH.

[LOCAL CORRESPONDENCE]

WHITTIER, Oct. 9.—That business in Whittier made gains during the last fiscal year is attested by the steady growth of stamp sales at the postoffice. Whittier people invested $19,686.26 in stamps and cards at the postoffice for the year—a gain of just about $1000 over the former year. In spite of world-wide financial stringency, new people are coming to Whittier, new homes are going up all the time, and new business houses have been in construction every day of the year.

HELD ON SERIOUS CHARGE.

Charged with suspicion of white slavery, Ramon Madero, a Mexican, 82 years old, of No. 145 North Oilve street, wanted in Jerome, and Entral Madero was arrested Rita Gonzales, an 18-year-old Mexican girl. According to Special Investigator Felts of the police department, Madero induced the Mexican girl to leave her home in Jerome and follow him to this city. The couple will be held in the City Jail until instructions are received from the Marshal in Jerome.

RAILROAD MEN ORGANIZE CLUB.

NEW BODY EXPECTED TO BE BIG FACTOR IN POLITICS IN SAN BERNARDINO.

SAN BERNARDINO, Oct. 9.-Rai oad men of the city, including en oloyees of the Santa Fe, Sait Lake, Southern Pacific and Pacific Electric railroads, have organized a railroad men's club for mutual benefit in mat men's club for mutual benefit in matters of economy, politics, etc. The organization bids fair to become a dominant factor in the commercial and political life of the city, as the membership to start out with is about 300. The railread men are to investigate the high cost of living, and their efforts will be directed against local merchanta. It is claimed that although reductions have been secured on freight rates for foodstuffs from the East, prices for necessities of life are as high as formerly.

C. E. Magee was named president, L. W. Grant, vice-president; N. E. Addy, recording secretary and treasurer; Hugh L. Dickson, corresponding secretary; trustees, R. P. Ruggles, George H. Wixom and George Hazen. Committees were named on Politics, Economics and Law.

Beginning today the consolidated San Bernardino County Fruit Exchange started the year on a new basis, and with a new set of officers. At the annual meeting three new associations were taken in by the exchange, and this resulted in a change of officers. James Barnhill of Coiton was elected president; Thomas Moffat of Rialto, vice-president; John I. Cummings of High grove, secretary and manager. These officers, with the following, make up the board of directors: H. H. Jackson of West Highlands, A. H. Morgan of Rialto, F. G. Webber of Bloomington and J. T. Miliken of Highgrove. The exchange is preparing to handle about 1200 cars of fruit next season.

Woo said through an interpreter that a year ago she was placed in the house of a wealthy Chinese gambler of Oakland. She was the veriest slave for the gambler for a month, when he sold her to Goon Foo, a vegetable peddler, for $800. The peddler married the child at Phoenix, where he lived.

Woo said she was shamefully mistreated by her husband. His brutality was so great that finally his own brother threw him out of the house. They came to this city, where Woo was finally rescued.

It was stated to Judge Taft that Goon Foo has a wife and three childer living in China. This statement will be investigated, and if found to be true and Woo's age is verified, the authorities will take action against him.

SMALL JUDGMENT. Attorney Hortner successfully defended the suit of Miss Winifred Paul against the Pacific Electric Rallway yesterday. She sued for $10,000 damages and Judge Taft awarded her $350. The accident happened April 17, 1913, when Miss Paul of Brookings. B. D., attempted to get on a car and was thrown while she had her hands on the railing. The court held that the conductor was careless for not observing the passenger getting on the car, but he also held that she was not seriously injured.

PROFESSOR LOSES SUIT. Prof. Charles H. Morse, who bought a home at Attadena and alleged, in a suit against Kirke Reynolds, tried by Judge Works, that there was not sufficient water to irrigate his trees, did not investigate the canyon from which the water came before he bought. Because of this largely the court gave judgment against him. The court held he should have investigated the water supply, as he had ample opportunity to do so. The evidence

Who Will Lower the Flag?

Thomas Jefferson was known in his time as a "Repub-lican." He has been claimed as the father of American Democracy, and his name is an inspiring slogan wherever American citizens of this party denomination meet, "orate" or consult.

Under the Democratic party the territory of the United States was extended magnificently, including the securing of Florida, of the Louisiana Purchase, of Texas, and of the Mexican territory stretching all the way from the Gulf of California to the mouth of Puget Sound in reality, and embracing everything west of the Rocky Mountains.

Under the leadership of Democrats, "falsely so called," every attempt at extending the flag in any part of the world has been frowned down upon. They abused the Republicans for the purchase of Alaska, opposed in every way the taking in of the Hawaiian Islands, made a way, face at the angle. more cuss" than the character of Lord Islands, made a wry face at the annexation of Porto Rico and have had spasms of "pains across" at every mention of our protectorate over But the species pines.

For that archipelago there are only two things possible. They must either remain for long years to come under the tutelage of the United States, in which they will be treated with absolute fairness, given self-governed. with absolute fairness, given self-gov-ernment in just such a measure and there were bargain-seekers on the pust as merits of the goods, and the Duke's educated and trained in the great task, name attached to them does not seem or they must fall a victim to the rato have added one copper half-penny pacity of some other nation, which will govern the Philippines, not as we do for the sake of the Filipinos, but for the hanefit of the conquerors.

In the first place the Philippines are an invaluable asset to our own country in protecting our interests in the Pacific. In the other case they will become a base of operations threatening our interests over every inch of the great ocean where the commerce of the future is to be developed, and to become as great in comparison to that of the past as the Pacific is greater than the Atlantic and as the Atlantic is greater than the Mediterranean Sea.

Government by Commission. Huh!

From Washington to Boggs Corner, all over the United States "and part of Texas," we are all crazy in our enthufor governsiasm ment by commission. It is the most cunningly-devised plan for cheating the people out of the right of governing themselves perhaps ever invented. The fun of it is that the proponents of this scheme are the very tricksters who cry the loudest: "The government back to the people." It is all bosh, but it catches the popular mind just for the moment in a way very disas-Congressman Mann of Illinois was entirely right on the opening day of October last week when he proclaimed in the House of Research meets only twice a month, and the contractors have to wait a month or more to have their work inspected and be able to get their money. These contractors are mostly poor, struggling men. They are obliged to put up a bond in 50 per cent. of the amount of the contract to guarantee the State that the work will be proposed. the State that the work will be properly done, and another bond in a like amount to secure the material men who furnish the stuff that goes into the road.

It is a most important matter to these men to have their work inspected, approved if properly done, to get their money and be released from their bonds, which are a fairly heavy burden upon them to carry.

pen of Mrs. Catharine Gouch Howard, wife of Gen. Volney E. Howard, was inspired by its beauty of sentiment as well as in correctness of rhyme and rhythm. They were a tribute to the bells at San Gabriel, and recounted a legend how a Spanish girl whose lover had fought in the war with the Indians had given her engagement ring to be cast in the melting pot when the bells were founded.

These mission bells were among the most sacred and interesting of all the memories of the State of California. They called the Indians to prayer and proclaimed the advent of civilization all the way from San Diego to Sonoma, along El Camino Real. We have, fortunately, in the State an association known as El Camino Real Association whose work of love is to care for the mission landmarks, to keep green in memory the road that led from mission to mission, and to perpetuate the memory of those romantic days.

This association has just devised a way for supporting the noble work that it is engaged in. The plan is the sale of a paper-weight or mantel ornament as you might look at it, a little miniature of the mission bells in oxidized copper as pretty as a picture.

By the Western Sea. Land of the Great South

66D REATHES there a man with soul so dead" who does not know William Cullen Bryant's line running "The melancholy days have come, the saddest of the year?" And who with similar soul does not recall Rev. John Keble's in description of an English autumn, one of which runs "Fades o'er the moor the bleak November day." There are few of the may hundreds of thousands of people in Southern California who are aborigines, or even native sons and daughters. We have all come from "the States" or "furring parts." Many of us can remember the gloom of an autumn day in Western Europe, and more of us still the days in the East when the withered leaves "echoed to the rabbit's tread." But we never have any melancholy days in Southern California, in the great Southwest or along by the Western Sea, and even November days are not bleak, and but few of them fade o'er the moor. We are well into October now, and after a summer with scarcely a single day that was accompanied by even an hour of uncomfortable heat, we are having days that make one wonder if in that "land of pure delight" there will be days more glorious, more comfortable, salubrious and enjoyable than those that are blessing us everywhere throughout this land of the heart's desire.

The Products of Our Soil.

HE following table presents in com pact form and in round numbers some of the principal crops produced in State this year—the total yield and the cash value at present market prices. It should be noted that most of them are essentially Southern California products:

And Why Not? As THE month of September was clos-ling, leading representatives of the Imperial Valley cotton industry met at the Chamber of Commerce building in Los Angeles to discuss three subjects. The first matter that engaged their attention was the finding of a market for the present cotton crop of $0,000,000 pounds and valued at $4,500,000. The occasion of a conference on this subject was the difficulty of moving the crop because of the existing war in Europe. That this part of the purpose of the meeting will be successfully carried out there is no room to doubt. But the gathering naturally called attention to the fact that we ought to have mills on the spot to work up his valuable crop. It is a new industry in California, but one that is growing so rapidly that its future looms up in very large outlines. The growers state that there will be no trouble at all in producing 100,000 bales, or 50,000,000 pounds of cotton. The soil and the climate in the Imperial Valley give possibilities of cotton growing possessed in no similar contracted section in the world. All grades and types of cotton do well there, including the finest Egyptian variety. Of course to prevent the hybridizing of the plants the various grades or varieties must be kept separate. Here is the basis in raw material for a very important industry. If the difficulty of marketing the present crop results in calling attention to the possibilities here of establishing a cotton spinning and weaving industry it will be of almost incalculable benefit to the Great Southwest. Of course the place for this factory will be somewhere between Los Angeles and the harbor. The haul of the raw material is not very long or expensive. The fuel for the running of the factory is here in abundance perial Valley could possibly produce.

T IS some years now since some bright newspaper writer of the city dubbed Los Angeles "the convention city of America." It was somewhat of a prophecy then, but a prophecy that has been promptly fulfilled Thirty-one conventions, some them international and many national, will be held in Los Angeles in 1915. A conservative estimate of those who will attend these conventions is 250,000 persons. Most of the dates remain to be decided.

California Celery Crop.

ORANGE county is the great section for the production of celery. A little of this toothsome vegetable is already reaching the market, but the real season opens about December 1. The acreage in the crop this year is about 800 acres. Orange county has had as high as 3000 acres of celery planted in a single year, but the sugar-beet industry, being more profitable for the farmers, has cut down the acreage to the figures given above.

Standardizing Our Fruits.

F RUIT GROWERS of the State are receiving formal notification from Wash ington in regard to a government order relating to the standardizing of California fruits sent by interstate commerce to the markets. This is excellent work, and will very long or expensive. The fuel for the running of the factory is here in abundance and cheap, and the markets of the west coast of America and of the east coast of Asia furnish consumers to absorb many ditions at the time of shipment. And it is times the amount of cotton the whole Im- not the greed of the California fruit grower that is to be guarded against, nor yet that [340] of the eastern fruit merchant. Immature oranges are shipped out of California to the market because they are demanded at general public, the ultimate consumers, for if they did not wish them the eastern mer chants would not order them, and no orders coming to California no fruit would be shipped.

Ready on Schedule Time.

HOSE who have had charge of pre paring for the opening of the great fair in San Francisco to take place next February have manifested admirable energy, persistence, judgment and capacity in their great task. The Times of the first day of great task. The Times of the first day of October, in its "Newspaper Day number," ted a luminous article on the subje of the fair and preparations made for its opening. Everything will be ready for the event on schedule time, and the work will be as inspiring in its character as it has been prompt in preparation. With forty foreign nations to exhibit at the fair, with nearly all the States in the Union par ticipating, it promises to be one of the greatest museums of art and industry ever presented to the eyes of mankind. The various industries of the world will be there in concrete form and in sufficient examples to make it both instructive and interesting. The artists of the country and of foreign countries will find there much also for their enlightenment and amu San Diego, too, is reported to be well along in preparations for its smaller but by ne means uninteresting exhibition, and it will be opened on schedule time. With the European war making the Old World unfit for American tourists, students, travelers or business men to visit, the proof a great crowd of people at the fair is most excellent. They will find the loveliest climate on the face of the earth to spend the winter in, and the same will be true of the summer following. The cities of the Coast are excellently supplied with hotels, lodgings, boarding-houses and restaurants to take care of millions of people And the visitors may be assured that pub-lic sentiment all up and down the Coast will not tolerate any attempt to take advantage of the crowds to "cinch" our vantage of the crowds to "cinch" our guests with unreasonable prices. Already here in Los Angeles owners and operators of apartment-houses and flats are giving assurance to their tenants that no matter what happens rates will not be raised above the normal during the exposition

AST winter was a somewhat unus wet one in Southern California, and the flood damage was exceedingly serious. It is estimated that there have been expended more than $2,000,000 in repairing the damages of last January and February. Of these the railroads had to spen $1.450,000. These repairs did not begin to measure the extent of the physical damage done, which was put at $7,600,000, of which $5,600,000 is estimated to have fallen on the shoulders of private individuals. urally it has created a great deal of interest and discussion, and there is now a committee of business men working for the prevention of another flood destruction like that. It will cost money, but it will save money in the end many times more than the cost.

Mexican "Puchero."

[London Chronicle:] When things are at their best in Mexico first-rate feeding is to be had. When such an expert as George Augustus Sala describes, saything as "a grand dish," there can be no doubt about it; and that is how he speaks of the "puchero"—the literal meaning of which is "pipkin." There is beef in it—boiling beef the French bouilli, in fact. There is bacon. There are garbanzos (broad beans) and charming little black puddings, and to be worth $15,000, cabbage, and delicate morsels of fried banana. He by the brief reference to the scriptures, evidence in The Eagle's ability by reference either to memory or to the Book to verify the point made by the said reference. The Eagle laments the fact that not all people of our day can so easily refer to the scriptures as those of us can who were born in other days. Therefore for the sake of those not well educated in the scriptures liberty is taken to give the words of the Proverb ferred to. Without quoting literally they are as follows: 'Let another praise thee, not thine own mouth, a stranger, not thine own lips.

Now here The Eagle acknowledges him self frankly to be much puzzled. What the reference to the greatest newspaper in the world and the verse from Proverbs quoted have to do with each other The Eagle is at an utter loss to understand. The article in question says nothing about newspapers, great or small, but The Eagle knows well that the great journal of civilization in which his comments appear is the greatest newspaper in the world, often referred to as besides. Such a reference is not boastful at all. It simply states the fact, an acknowledged, indubitable, uncontrovertible fact.
The Eagle has opened a copy of The Times of a Sunday morning's edition in half the capitals of Europe, and has heard intelligent men express their astonishment in half a men express their astonishment in half a dozen languages at the enormous bulk of the journal. Greatness refers to size, and to quality, too, and the business men as well as the general public in Los Angeles, throughout the Great Southwest and throughout all America acknowledge that the paper is greatest in quality, and it is they that make it the greatest in size. But perhaps the critic of The Eagle was referring to his patron saint or most admired hero, the redoubtable Teddy, in the referring to his patron saint or most admired there, the redoubtable Teddy, in the reference to the words of Solomon. Surely they are most fitting, and should be engraved in letters of gold on tablets of silver and placed where the colonel would see and notice them at every turn of his life. Since the close of the scriptures there never was anot tell whether he is young or old. His handwriting indicates a man not only of intelligence but of firmness of character. It is a somewhat youthful chirography that presents itself to The Eagle's eye. The Eagle also knows that the average human being has a very loose way of talking, and there fore under all reserve and subject to correc-tion he takes the liberty of doubting that ting in strict accuracy any one ever heard Abraham Lincoln referred to as "the most boastful, most proud in his own con-ceit, and most cruelly vindictive of all our public men."

The reason The Eagle indulges himself in the liberty of this doubt is that he was not born yesterday, nor yet the day before, nor eke last week nor last year. He ranks midway between the Psalmist's three score years and ten and the four score years when our "strength is but weakness and sorrow." lived through the time between the election of Abraham Lincoln and his assassination at the hands of the crazy thespian, Wilkes Booth. During the years of the great Civil War many awfully cruel things were said of the martyred President, but no enemy of his ever dared to brand himself in the eyes of the world as a deliberate fool, ignoramus or follower of Ananias by referring to him in the terms that so aptly fit the great

The critic's criticism reminds The Eagle of a story about John Wesley, the great Anglican preacher, who made sinner's tremble for their misdeeds and "flee as a bird to the mountain" from "the wrath to come" as depicted by the founder of Methodism. He was describing a sinner of very mean characteristics when a big burly fellow from the audience got up and shouted, "That's a lie!" And Wesley, drawing his eyebrows down over his eyes so as to see better, peered into the corner of the temple, whence the voice in tones of the bull of Bashan came, and in apt reference to the book of Job quietly remarked, "Have I drawn out Leviathan with a hook?"

Of course The Eagle never questioned the greatness of Col. Roosevelt. He would not ered before the eyes of men. Why, Eagle acknowledges the greatness of the devil himself! In this far he is in accord with all the admirers, adulators and wor-shipers of Teddy. But there agreement

It is a strange thing that no non-admirer of Mr. Roosevelt can ever make an unfavorable reference to the great man without drawing out a whole school of leviathans in earnest, mostly in angry remonstrance against questioning his goodness where his reatness is acknowledged.

Many men before Col. Roosevelt have shot an enemy in open warfare, legalized murder, but he is the first one in The Eagle's experience who ever deliber-ately boasted of this fact, marking out an individual enemy as the victim of his vin-dictiveness. If Abraham Lincoln had been a soldier in the war he would surely have shot deliberately and straight, done his duty as he had sworn in defense of his country, but he would not with self-boasting arrogance have blazoned the fact abroad as an act to be proud of.

There are dozens and dozens of men who are all-round admir-able fellows, whose families take society rank, but who are themselves doomed forever to remain in the outer pale. They may attain popularity among men, but those same men readily understand why the wife and girls don't find him desirable at social affairs. It isn't fair, of course, and it isn't logical. But it's one of the fundamental facts of society and therefore interesting. The underbred man often gets in, intermittently, temporarily, to fill gaps, to make do, but he doesn't belong and he knows it as well as they do. When a smart society woman marries one of them, which she often es, her first efforts are toward inculcating lass." But it has to be inculcated young, and they rarely succeed.

The Red Cross

T HE local British Consul is a person who is regarded with mixed emotions by his local compatriots. There is a good deal of the little tin-god about him. He has the unique knack of saying the wrong thing in the wrong way on the wrong occasion and getting away with it through sheer impregnable pomposity. On several occasions local Britishers have reached explosion point and certain petitions to the home government on the subject are not unknown. But Great Britain still regards Los Angeles as a little village and the affair not worth considering. But latterly Los Angeles has been playing a big part in contributions of both men and widows and orphans. They chose a man in high standing to act as treasurer and $3000 was collected in two weeks. British Consul remarks that he expects the money to be handed over to him and sent to England in small installments. Local Britishers guessed not-it would go in large amounts direct from the elected treasurer.

So British Consul organizes a little fund of his very own and distributes leaflets to the effect that if Britishers subscribe to the other fund for Red Cross purposes they may conceivably be helping the enemy!

Loud and violent protests from British subjects. We don't recognize wounded soldiers as enemies, say they. The Red Cross is the Red Cross. They are indignant to the bursting point that the British fund should be tinged with this diabolically unsportsmanlike attitude. Something is going to happen to that British Consul. War is in the air. And the local Britishers feel that it is time they were represented by a large-minded, large-hearted man in so great a city as Los Angeles. When one man can give the whole tone and character to a large sec tion of people, those people propose that it shall be of a worthy tone and character.

The Want Ads

THE want ads in the European papers are highly interesting just now. It's an ill wind— The For Sale columns teem with gentle suggestions that buyers should patronize patriots who are sacrificing all for their country. There are gentlemen that advertise second-hand automobiles at luxury prices, "because I have enlisted for the war and need the money to provide for a wid-owed mother." There are ladies that advertise for paying guests at fancy terms, "because my husband has enlisted for the Jewels, furs, furniture, clothing, are all offered for sale to generous non-com-batants by "lady who is left without means white their husbands.

But perhaps the gem of the collection is that of the "young, daring lady who will be grateful to receive instructions in driving high-speed automobile, anxious to volunieer for driver in motor ambulance work."

Inquilino, and the Inquilino has the right to leave when he pleases. As a rule, the haciendados try to hold their men, and the men, if at all well treated, are not likely to move. On some of the farms there is a general store run by the landlord for his servants, and there the Inquilino makes the most of his purchases. He is supposed to give one man's work in exchange for his rent, and this means that he gets his house and garden for from $2 to $5 per week. I am told that the Inquilinos love their mas-ters, and I know that the masters are fond of the men who work for them. The mas-ter occupies somewhat the position of a feudal lord, and the men treat him with a great deal of respect.

Army Service Civilizing.

"The service in the army, which is now universal, is having civilizing influence upon the lower classes. Every young man, when he arrives at the age of 20, is supposed to spend one year in the military establish-ment, during which time he is whipped into shape, taught to obey and made into a soldier. The military system is that of Ger-many, and education is combined with the training. There are German professors in all the military academies, and the cadets who aid in handling the troops are usually well educated. The Inquilino is broadened by the service, and it tends to make him leave the farm for the city and to engage in labor there.

Another influence toward civilizing and elevating the Inquilino is the labor organiis often so drunk Sunday is take Monday to recover.

The Inquilinos pay no rent for such houses, and they have in addition small tracts of ground which they can cultivate, as one of the employers are organized, and so are the stevedores as well as the members of some of the mechanical trades. The labor element is beginning to take part in politics, and it has now two representatives of police and of the state railways are under the civil service, and positions there are in great demand among the common people, especially as the wages are high.

The Chilean policeman receives about $30 a month and one meal a day. He is under military training and patrols the streets with his knapsack on his back. In time of war he will probably go into the army. It seems strange to see a policeman marching up and down the street in the heat of the afternoon with a great knapsack on his

Speaking of the police, they have the custom here, common in all South American cities, of whistling every half hour or so throughout the night. They have shrill whistles, which they blow loud and long, waking the light sleeper and warning the burglar or thief as to just where they are.

Much of the mercantile business of Chile is done by foreigners. The full-blooded Spaniard looks down upon trade, and he is content to have the half-breed and the man from outside do his merchandising for him. The big business is mainly in the hands of foreigners, and some of the largest fortunes of the country are held by families with European names. The Chilean Minister to Great Britain is Augustin Edwards. He owns the Mercurio, the leading newspaper of the country, and has millions in farms and stocks of one kind and another. Among other prominent names are the Fosters, the Walkers and Rogerses. One of the great patriots and heroes of Chile was named O'Higgins, another was Cochrane and another Arturo Pratt. The city of Valparaiso today is largely European, and its chief business establishments are English or German. There is a great deal of English, Irish and American blood in some of the best families of Santiago, and the southern part of the country is given over to the Ger-

Uncle Ned laughed. "Why, of cours your dolly can have a drink." And the big man, on all fours, began to paw at the damp stained earth, as the desert coyotes do in the dried river beds. A foot below the sur-face the ground was wet. He took the cup which the little girl held toward him and bedded it in the bottom of the hole. Drop by drop the moisture filtered through the ground until a ring of muddy water covered the bottom of the cup.

"There's a drink for your dolly," said Un-

If he had held the cup for an hour the muddy water would not have risen to the brim; he had taken the last drop.

"Thanks, Uncle Ned. Awsie good, my dolly

The big man smiled. The driver, who was the little girl's father, and the mother sat down in the shade of a mesquite tree.

It was stiffing hot, and the child, who was worn out with the long journey, was soon asleep in her mother's arms. Five minutes passed. A look of fear was dawning on their faces. It was a brave, calm fear that made them silent. Finally Uncle Ned took the them silent. Finally Uncle New Look the little girl gently from her mother's arms. The others rose and stood looking down at the damp, stained earth where once had been a living pool of water. Still they spoke no word, nor did they look into each other's faces. Slowly, while the little girl slept, they retraced their steps, climbed into the wagon and went on into the burning heat. It was sixty miles back over the trail. It was forty miles ahead to the next water hole. Their canteens were empty; they couldn't make it.

Three miles out from the Lone Wolf the leaders began to stagger. A yellowish haze appeared on the horizon. Uncle Ned set his teeth. "Get under the lee of the rimrock before it strikes us," he warned.

They had scarcely gained this partially a desperate situa-greater in turning and buckled on the canvas flaps, when the ber frail arms she minutes the heavy artillery wheels were doll, with the chin battered and one tracks across the barren, sand-swept waste were obliterated. Two hours later the wind

The child awoke, stretching out her arms and crying: "I want my dolly, where's my dolly?

The mother turned her face away, for she realized suddenly that they had come on leaving the doll back there by the dried-up Lone Wolf spring. When the little tot began to cry they tried to tell her that the sand had covered her dolly up, that they would find it some other day. But the little mother was not to be comforted. She remembered perfectly where she had laid it. She appealed to her father: "Please go back for my dolly—she's kyin' for me."

Again they tried to comfort the child. How could they? "I'll buy you a better one," coaxed Uncle Ned.
"I want my own dolly," sobbed the child. Uncle Ned took her in his great arms.

He tried stories, he tried everything, but it was useless. Poor baby! what could they do? There was a fighting chance ahead, but to turn back was hopeless. The child went back to her mother's arms, and at the end of half an hour she was still

The big man could stand it no longer. Uncle Ned got to his feet, his mouth drawn in sharp, determined lines.

"Tm going back for that doll," he announced, and turned abruptly.

The woman started to object, but the big man waved her back.

"Ride one of the mules, then," urged the

"No," replied the other, "I'm better able to walk than any mule in this outfit."

The big man trudged along over the burning waste. The soles of his feet were scorched; his eyes became watery and dull. In all that vast wilderness there was not a track to follow, and it seemed to the man that it was not himself, but his weary spirit, that he was leading on. When at last he came in sight of the hog-back he cut across, keeping in the shadow of the rim-rock and orm hurled itself upon them. In five following it until he came to the arroyo sembled mourners. upon his knees and drank long and thirstily. He bathed his wrists and throbbing temples; then he stood up. On the rock above him were the curious Indian hieroglyphics, and to the right stood the clump of mes-quite trees. Again the man drank from the clear pool. Again he stood up and glanced at the carved face of the rock. There was something strange, confusing about it all, and the doll was missing.

A few minutes later, uncertain in his mind, the man climbed to the top of the low hog-back, and before him, scarcely 200 yards away, was another arroyo and another clump of mesquite trees. He hurried on and saw again the Indian hieroglyphics that the Jorgenson party had told them about. It was the place they had been but six hours before. Nature had duplicated itself almost to a blade of grass.

The man went on, he spied the dark, damp stain on the ground which they had mis-taken for Lone Wolf spring. He saw the doll lying there on the bank, and seized it. Suddenly the big man began to tremble and to laugh and cry, then he hugged to his breast the thing that had saved them—the little wax doll with the dented chin, the nose battered and one ear missing.

To Rehearse Own Funeral.

[St. Paul Pioneer Post:] Now comes the reverend clergyman of this scientific age whose own voice will ring out the panegyric at his own funeral. Rev. G. L. Morrill, pastor of the Minneapolis People's Church, not yet even scathed by the sickle of the Reaper, is the man, and his post-mortem forensic feat is to be performed through the medium of phonograph records. He already has preached the sermon, arranged the musical program, selected the Scriptural reading and the psalms. All he has to do now is die, when some friend or member of the family will remove the wax cylinders from their resting place in the minister's safety deposit vault and run them off in their proper order on a large talking machine in the presence of the as-

The girl on the bed sat up and pushed the hair from her eyes. Her cheeks were flushed, her lips as salty as the salt old sea in which she had rollicked so happily all summer long. She would have called out to the petulant boy, but just then she heard a shrill repetition of the same whistle. Ted-dy, she thought. She heard him leap the fence and come noisily up the gravel walk, then drop his big self into a protesting can-

"Going home tomorrow, Nance?" The question was drowned in the general up-roar, but the crowd knew that this cheerful summer cottage would be shut and dark tomorrow night when they passed. The rest of them would straggle home during the following week.

From the porch they could catch a glint of the sea at the street's end, could smell its bracing salt, could hear its booming call.

A second's lull came over the gaily unconscious crowd of boys and girls. Too bad—but good times vanished. Time whisked away. Nothing was stable. Noth-ing could be held. Only school was as inevitable as death.

"Herb's gone already, hasn't he?" som girl ventured.

"Yep. It's a darn shame to bust up the bunch.

"Aw, cheer up! There's another summe around the corner, you know," came the care-shifting voice of Teddy, deep from the comfort of his green-striped canvas chair. Come on-somebody strike up 'Mandalay.'

The next second they were romping through the song, the suspicion of depression that had hovered over them entirely blown away.

Blown away entirely, except, perhaps from Nance. With Sammy a close second. To them the summer evening was a long one. The seriousness of life had reached out to both of them. The slight, oh, ever so slight touch of her fingers seemed an iron grip to them, for they were both hover ing between the 'teens and twenties.

A cudden decided chill blew in with the night breeze. The girls huddled in their sweaters, dived their hands into their own pockets or into the spacious pockets of their companions, with little shivers and excla

"Don't think I'm buttin' in, Nance," he said, his voice unmanageable, "but is it say, it's Herb, isn't it?"

Her voice broke quite openly now, the she still fought the near-by tears. She had been under a strain all evening. She had made a valiant effort to draw the covers over her secret.

"Ye-e-es," she admitted. "But he doesn't care a rap for me, not a rap. He—he—"But she couldn't control the tears. They

A hint of inner heat swept across the freckled face. "A man who is right has no business to make such a code." Then the anger seemed to leave the plasterer, and he added in conciliatory tones: "You cer tainly must have had good cause for making such a rule, Mr. Cimarron. You don't look like a tightwad."

"Well," replied the druggist, "Matt Dasse would start off about like this: 'When the average man contracts a debt, he means to pay. Oh, yes! After a time he grows accustomed to having this debt hanging over him. He no longer feels his responsibility. Now your money's gone, Pliny, for he'll never get out that rut. When, later, the debt becomes outlawed, he doesn't have to pay. Now he may have the money time after time, and if it ever occurs to him to pay up he'll down the thought. There's always some immediate need for just that amount."

"Then he'd go on: 'In the final analysis, a man doesn't pay his debts because he has to. He pays them because he's born with a sense of right and wrong. Pliny continued: "'Matt,' Polk would go on, 'he may, if circumstances offer the chance for him to get out of paying, put it off for years. The debt may become out-lawed. But there'll come a time when he'll remember; a time when he'll feel grateful again; a time when he'll recognize this old debt as a thorn in his flesh. And he'll say to himself: "They call me an honest man. I am not an honest man. I can't deceive myself." And he'll pay the debt to ease his own mind. And therefore he is at bottom an honest man.' "

"Well, there were the two sides of it," he continued. "I leaned toward Polk Creight on's theory. On that theory—that a man pays his debts from an innate sense of obli gation and gratitude and not because it is policy to do so-I gave credit to everybody in the town who asked for it."

He paused again.

"Well," the listener prodded, "what was the result?"

"The result is," said Pliny slowly, "that today I have thousands of dollars' worth of outlawed notes. Hard times struck Felix and smashed my theory. Men didn't pay when it became evident that they didn't have to. They moved away and forgot. Or they stayed right there and forgot."

"But you collected more than you lost, didn't you?" suggested the plasterer.

"Oh, yes, I suppose so," returned Pliny.
"But wait a bit. The peculiar part is yet

"Matt Dassel went broke and his wife got desperately sick. He came to me for drugs on credit. He got them. His wife got well. He struggled on a time, then moved away. He lived a half-mile out of town and he was gone before I knew it. I never heard from him direct for five years."

"He never paid, of course?"
Pliny disregarded this and continued: "One day came a letter from him. In it was a check for what he owed with compound inaway. Said he was sending me the money simply for the sake of old friendship and because it didn't hamper him to part with it. Cynical to the last—but he paid."

The plasterer laughed. "Go on," he urged. "I know what's come."

"I know what's comin". How about the other fellow when hard times hit the town?".
"They hit Polk Creighton worse than Pliny Cimarron paused and blinked at the light before continuing: "All through my business career, young man, I've had these fellows' theories and their examples switching me pro and con. The freckled young man went out and stood on the sidewalk, looking across the street. Pliny closed his safe and reached up to switch off the last light. He paused with his hand in mid air, looking at the dejected figure out on the pavement. The figure turned and started for the stairway entrance. Pliny Cimarron slowly lowered his hand and smiled.

"What's the use trying to lie to your-self?" he mumbled. "I don't believe it; I never have; I never will. That poor pretty little woman is sick—and she's going to get

He had meant to go to the back door, call his wife, and have her deposit the medicine at the threshold of Room 3. But just then he caught a glimpse through the front door of the plasterer and his wife passing with suitcases. He must face the music, so he hobbled to the front and called.

The two came back.

"No," said Pliny shortly, "I been lying to myself—that's all. Good night."

"I'm glad," murmured the plasterer as he tendered the check. "Good night," He pressed Pliny's hand and hurried his wife down the street.

With that little snort of disgust Pliny went in and bolted the door. He reached for the button of the last light, then paused as he saw a slim slip of blue paper on the showcase. It hung over the edge and was weighted down by a bottle of face cream which had been separated from a pyramid for the purpose. He picked it up and took out his nose-glasses. He held them before his eyes and gasped:

The Broken Bond. By Elsa Escherich.

"ON THE SQUARE."

T WAS twilight in early October. A cool breeze drifted in from the lake up the almost deserted streets and fitfully car-ried a few brown curied leaves with it. A young girl in a dark suit stood motionless on the stone steps of a tall gray apartment building, staring down the street where a man's figure was losing itself in the dis-tance. There was no one else in sight but a group of children skipping rope on a far corner, and from somewhere came the doleful melody of a hand-organ and the rumble of an elevated train. The monotonous wash of the breakers, the idle drifting of the leaves, the hand-organ and the distant shouts of the children all seemed a part of the dream-world left to the girl, as she stood apart in the twilight.

She turned at last, and slowly climbed the three flights of stairs to her own little The bunch of red carnations in her hand she laid upon the table and knelt down beside them, her face among their fragrant blossoms. A long time she knelt there, until light had almost faded; then she took off her hat and coat and sat down in the little rocking-chair, from where she could see the white-capped breakers rolling in to where the high wall hid the railroad and the sand. With her elbows on the sill she watched until the stars came out and the waves broke in the darkness. She dreaded the end of the perfect day. More real than the starlight seemed the memories of a boat drifting over glassy waters, and the yellow and reds of an India summer sunset, and more than these, the intense gray eyes smiling into hers. Bitter was the thought that it should not have

From the street below the girl heard the approach of footsteps and noted that they mounted the steps below. Up one flight and another and still another they came ever louder, until they stopped before the hall door. At the expected knock the girl turned on the light, stepped into the hall and opened the door. A young man, very slender and tall, bared his fair crisp curis in the gaslight.

"Come in, Rand," she said, and stepped

He passed her into the room. As she closed the door she remarked: "I thought you weren't coming."

"I wasn't," he confirmed, and stood look ing down at her with a strange hard expression in his blue eyes.
"Then why did you?" she challenged.

He moistened his lips. "Didn't you want

"Why, of course," she replied lightly.

"Then why did you go with him?"

"Why didn't you go, too?" she parried.
"He asked you to dinner."
"You didn't have any right," he insisted.

"You could have gone, too," she replied stubbornly. "It's your own fault." "After dinner—did you—where were yo this afternoon?" he asked cautiously.

"Yes," she shortly answered his halfspoken question.

He arose suddenly and stood before the window, his hands thrust deep into his trousers pockets. A long time he stood there motionless, and at last turned slowly and sat down again, facing Lucy.

"We're engaged," he said quietly. "What of it?"

"Did you tell him?" he questioned.

"Why not?

For the first time she was moved. "Ion't know," she replied uncomfortably. Relentlessly he probed on: "Why didn't

She rocked back and forth a few times and answered, full of suppressed emotion

Leaning back in his chair, with folder arms, he regarded her with the same stony expression he had when he first came in Lucy did not even glance at him, and the soft creaking of her rocker and the ticking of the little clock on the dresser were the only sounds in the room.

"Do you think it's fair?" Randolph finally asked coldly.

She winced. "No-not to him," she replied with slow emphasis.
"Nor to me," he added.

"That was your own fault. Anyway, I'll rite. You needn't worry."

"Tonight," she retorted hotly.

He picked up his hat and retreated to the coor. With one hand on the knob he

After three nights Randolph came. Smiling cheerfully, he extracted a invender box tied with purple ribbon from his pocket and placed it on the table. He flung his damp overcoat on the trunk and gathered Lucy in his arms. With whispered endearment he kissed her heavy brown hair, and softly said: "Sweetheart, it has been so long since I have had you. I couldn't stay away any more, even if you didn't want me. Let us never allow anything to come between us again, Lucy. I would rather die. I'm so lad it's all over now. Please kiss me.

Reluctantly she raised her face for his ciss and drew away from his arms.

"Aren't you on the square now, and w that letter?" he asked happily.

Silently the man followed the girl down the stairs, and neither spoke as they walked along the dark wet streets, bright only where the reflections of the stores lay upon them. "Women must first of all cultivate a quality of equipoise and fairness in political life," continued The Gentlewoman, "as in social life. They have come to believe that they, and they alone, are responsible for all the moral uplift in politics and all the the husband, her sons, her is the home, she is tremendously in politics, and considers it her was as her pleasure, to be intelli-tived as her pleasure, to be intelli-tived on all the great questions of the suffrage in this State, and the suffrage in this State, and desired it, but she believes that desired it, but she believes that the have been invested with the great legislative measures, remedial in their nature, being enacted in all the States. Now, as a matter of fact, had it not been for the fairness, the keen sense of equity, and the generous appreciativeness of Cali fornia men, women would not now be vot-ers. Women are on a fair way to establish the fact that they are largely lacking in these great essentials of political character. When a Legislature compo men enacts a certain law, because it is wise and good, it seems rather like Chanticleer crowing and assuming that he thereby causes the sun to rise, for a lot of women to get together and proclaim that they forced the men to do it. It strikes me as being unfair and absurd.

"I don't want to be too assertive on this point. Let us go back a little into the history of our own wonderful republic. Does not the story of brave men fighting and dying for pure and noble ideals show this? Is there not something supreme, transcending the divided efforts of men and women back of the progress of man as we note it along different lines. And in the pages of history? And haven't men had not had enough prepalways responded in the largest possible always responded in the largest possible sure, according to their lights, to this thing? en who stood by those men while they they are fighting for principle, and I felt that I had glimpsed holy ground when I noted the two bright red spots that had eaped to her white cheeks.

"Do you think there is a tendency among California women to segregate themselves in their political work, to form cliques and coteries?" I asked.

"There certainly is, and I greatly deplore it. Because these coteries of women can be much more easily handled by the designing politician than can women who ally themselves openly with a political party and work for its principles. For instance, there is in Los Angeles a clique of "Progresalve" women who are being dominated by the Socialists; a band of influential Demo-eratic women who are being dominated by certain very clever women of the "Progre cive" party. The Republican women are practically divided into two factions. Look at the voting strength dissipated by this sort of thing! Is it not exactly what machine politicians want? Is it not exactly the kind of thing to create endless confusion and neutralize the power of the women voters?

"It is," I answered.

"Why is it? Well, I have come to the conclusion that it must be because women in political life lack esprit de corps, discrimination, fairness and tolerance, and last and because they are trying to work out certain political ideals alone. This can never be. The sooner women realize that in social, religious and political life—all life, in fact—they must work with men, supplementing the work of men, and not by themselves, the sooner will they touch solidarity, which is power."

It was a long speech for The Gentle-woman, and her keen blue eyes were glowing with such earnestness and enthusiasm that it was easy to see that she had more to say, and I urged her to say it. She continued:

"There can never be such a thing as a woman's party. If women mean to be effective in political life they must be fair above all things, and broad. In political life, as in home life, we must work with our men, not by ourselves. We must together mobilize for the campaign. If we think their ideals are not as high as ours, don't we in the home begin to exert all possible influ-ence to lift those ideals higher by con-

For these are fostered by politicians who can never hope to sway women as a unit, but who may use the cliques now forming in clubs and other women's organizations as a leverage to swing elections their way."

I felt rather crestfallen at The Gentlewoman's arraignment of our women voters But I had to admit the truth of what she said. "The female body politic is already showing symptoms of canker sores of the severest sort. There is too frequently the presence of faddism and the absence of

But the interview was not all of politics. The eternal problem was touched uponthe problem of woman's crowning sin, which makes the crowning sorrow of the world. And here The Gentlewoman rose to that supreme moral height which she showed herself so capable of reaching. Speaking sorrowfully of the real Marys of Magdala, The Gentlewoman expressed for the poor unfortunates a sublime pity, a compassion measureless in its beautiful breadth. But for the Scarlet Woman-the open but more often covert self-wrecker and homewrecker, who not only abases and debases herself, and at the same time proves false to her own, but brazenly invades other homes, and, with the sinful co-operation of men as untrue as herself, wrecks other once happy families, The Gentlewoman expressed only womanly scorn and a lofty aversion

The Gentlewoman had arisen, and stood sweet and calm in her regal height before As I clasped her hand in parting, I felt that she, stately, gracious, cultured Christian lady, had personally transcended the necessity of contending for political or any other kind of freedom, for she had attained it in the royal domain of her own superb womanhood.

And going home, as I caught the perfume of the Cape jasmine overhanging her gar-den pathway, I was profoundly impressed, stantly living higher ourselves? It should deeply grateful for the hour she had given not be different in political life, granting me to sit with her in her well-ordered house that all men's ideals need lifting, which I and listen to a conversation long to be remembered.

of that Charlotte Heath whose picture won first mention at the Art Club Exhibition.

Then into her life came the miracle, Bruce Gordon. A man a little higher than all other men. And even from the beginning of his casual dropping in upon the family circle evenings she knew, as only a woman knows, that he sought her-not Ethel or Charlotte.

As she waited in the golden hush of silent understanding for the spoken word, the glor; of it transfigured the world.

The silence was broken at last. With her cheeks flushed in deepening pink, her lips tremulous, her eyes radiant, she began to listen. He spoke very frankly. The loneliness of the great empty house since his wife's death had become unendurable. He longed for a dear companion to share life with him for the years that remained. But he would not deceive her. A deep respect, a warm regard, the love friend gives friend he could offer her, but that other love-love such as

And undeceived, with her eyes wide open, she had come-to the house where the face of the other woman looked down at her No, it was a man, It was Bruce!

She thought she was so well practiced in taking second place it would not matter.

But she had never loved before-not with a crying passion of love demanding alland that afternoon as she sat darning Bruce's socks, if she had not been ashamed by the brilliance of the other's genue.

To half her social world she was known to be found out, she would nave so as the sister of the Miss Heath who sang dashed from the wall the picture of the state woman who was first; broken the glass torn that confident smile, with her fists; torn that confident smile, those triumphing eyes into bits. Afterward, what she suffered then seemed so petty and foolish and childish.

But as her needle shook in her hand, pricked her finger with a sting of blood, she never dreamed of the greater suffering at that very moment hurrying toward her.

Not even did the wild ringing of the front doorbell through the silent house give her a foreboding start.

It was Suzette's afternoon out. The Chinese cook had gone to his basement room for his usual smoke and siesta. She went to the door herself.

At sight of the ambulance drawn up at the curb a little shiver ran through her. There must have been an accident in the neighborhood. Someone hurt who had to be taken to the hospital. But why had they stopped to tell her?

The strange young man on the step was explaining. Something about an automobile skidding down a hill. . . . A

Even in the weak whisper the love in that little word sent joy beating through her pulses.

"My own dear-Agnes."

Then at last she left the room for she had fainted, and they carried her from it. The day of the funeral her mother and her father took her home with them, and it was not until five months after Bruce's death that the second wife entered the room where the picture of the first wife hung.

Five months of darkness palely lighted by one struggling little flame of hope.

At the Tomb of Jonah.

By Frederick Sim

TODAY IN MOSSUL.

S A BOY-when I read of Jonah and the whale-I never dreamed that one day I was to stand at Jonah's tomb, and see Arabs worship him as a saint!

The famous old prophet who rode in the fish is buried at Mossul, in far-off Mesopo tamia. Mossul itself, from which our word "muslin" came, stands on the foaming Tigris opposite old Nineveh. And here is a sketch of what life is like today in the town where Jonah rests.

It is a dirty, crowded town, is Mossul, with 50,000 people jammed inside its medie-val walls. Its narrow, warped streets are no more than crooked alleys that wander aimlessly through the town-dusty in summer and seas of mud in winter. So narrow are these passages that two loaded don-keys, if they chance to meet, cannot pass till one donkey has been backed into a door

Mossul's houses are Moorish style-two stories, few windows, and open court inside and flat roofs with parapets-so that the family may sleep on the roof in summer The main door to each house is a huge affair, studded with great bolts and barred at night like the gate to a fortress gesting the old days of Mongol invasions.

To accommodate its important caravar trade, Mossul has built up many caravan-serais, or "resthouses." With Naomi, my Bagdad boy, I spent my first night at Mos sul in one of these singular khans, as the natives call them. The khan is a sort of compound or stockade of mud walls, with out a roof. Around the inside of the walls runs a row of little cells, to which travelers are assigned.

In the middle of the inclosure is a great platform, on which are piled the bales of freight taken from the pack animals, and around the edge of this platform; run mud manger, from which the beasts are fed.

These historic caravanserais form of the most picturesque features of Middle Eastern life. No traveler, from Marco Polo down to date, has crossed Mesopotamia without recording his impression of the un speakably filthy and noisy "khans.

Come spend a night with me in the khan at Mossul, and see for yourself what the caravan night life is like.

It was dusk when my little pack train, weary from the long three-day march from Bagdad, got into Mossul. Naomi fought his way through the thick crowd of tired animals, pilfering dogs and blaspheming mule teers, and found a small recess in the row of cells which was but partially occupied by a Kurdish family, overflowing from the cell next door. We ejected these folk with that vigor which marks the unfeeling white man's passage through the East, and took possession ourselves.

I sat cross-legged at the entrance, and watched the surging crowd in the open square outside, as Naomi prepared dinner There were camels laden with big square stamped with shipping marks that hinted at Marseilles or Manchester; there were mules with curtained cages on their backs from which peeped the timid, nose ringed women of the pilgrims; in and out among the larger animals squeezed the tiny pack donkeys, bearing on their backs the rolled-up "yourghans" or quilted cover ings, unspeakably filthy, in which the pilgrims wrapped themselves at night; evilmuleteers cursed each other and struck offending donkeys viciously with their mule sticks-a short club with a round knob of hardened hitumen on the end of it. Dogs snarled, bit and scuffled under foot. Every living thing seemed bent on securing and retaining for itself the warmest corner in the khan-that is, all but the camels. They, patient, stoical brutes, looked on sad-eyed and indifferent, at the unseemly strife of men, mules and dogs about them. The dirt, the crush and the din were dreadful. Children, stowed away in the mahafi, or cages on the mules, began to cry to get out; poor little wretches! ne of them had been cramped in these Naomi hung a blanket across the front of my mean abode, and shut out the up a goat skin which had hung over his fired on our camp were doubtless a party of miserable view. But tired and sore as I shoulder, wade out into the river waist-deep Shammar sent out to spy on the movements dogs barked, babies cried, tired Kurds scolded, swore and then sat up to smo and sing. Finally I, too, got up, lit a cigarette and tried to figure out why a white man should ever come to this forsaken land.

Next morning early Naomi and I left the pesthouse that had sheltered us, and started out afoot to do Mossul, Naomi hunted up his Telkafi relatives, whom he had not seen for years, and of course the master then became the servant's guest, for a few hours at least. We ate preserved sweets, pistachio nuts, manna, nougat, and nany such delicacies for which Mossul is noted: we drank sweetened rosewater and smoked countless cigarettes, and I gave away to these curious, prying, but polite people all the secrets of my family for three Naomi's numerous sisters, unveiled and good to look at, came shyly out and sat cross-legged on the rug he placed for them at a proper distance from me. Being na tive Christians, they could show their faces without being disgraced. They wore baggy blue trousers, long Mother Hubbard gowns of some dark color, yellow stockings and fancy slippers all covered with beads. Their hig brown eyes gazed steadily at me with that luster that is bought in western worlds at the price of belladonna, and their white teeth glistened in beautiful perfection-in a land where no dentrifice was ever seen.

But the most ardent admirer of women could hardly have found their conversatio exciting. The talk of the best class of men in eastern native circles is notoriously bar ren of fresh ideas. Conversation with them seldom rises above the commonplace topics of food, money and bodily comforts. It is not surprising then that their women-folk, sequestered so closely, should fail utterly in what we look on as conventional "visiting." After one has answered their long list of prying personal questions, concerning the number of one's relatives and their respective ages, virtues and fortunes, and has stated over and over again just what one's own income is, etc., they relapse into profound silence: no native of the East I have ever known shows that desire so common in some Americans to talk of themselves, their fortunes or troubles. When they do talk, as I said, it is all about food, money and often of baaksheesh. In the streets of Bagdad, if one stop and listen, he will hear from the noisy crowd about him the Arab words for the various coins in use; "Kroosk," "Kran," "Piaster." "Modjedieh." etc., seem on every-

The stalls in the bazaar looked about the same as those of Bagdad, except for the quantity of Russian wares offered for sale. English "piece-goods" were there in heaps, and a great variety of German cutlery, crockeryware, glass, clocks, watches, etc., and much cheap jewelry. I saw no American goods sold at all except a stock of sewing machines of a well-known American make: but these were marked "Made in Great

From the main bazaar I wandered or through the town, followed by the usual crowd of curious Arabs and Kurds. Any foreigner who chances to pass through one of these remote towns of East Arabia be at once a sort of "free street parade." Children flock about in swarms, begging baaksheesh, older men leave off work and join the procession, and by the time one has passed the length of a village street a small army is tagging at his heels. Any sensible traveler is perfectly safe, however, so long as he avoids going near the mosque Mossul people seemed less concerned about their mosques than any other townsfolk I had met: with Naomi I walked past several of them, photographed one of the minarets, and then continued on my walk toward the river. And here I beheld an odd spectacle.

I had read that in early Assyrian days warriors used to cross the Tigris, even in heavy armor, by swimming on inflated goatstill survived. So I was astonished on arwalk calmly down to the water's edge, blow southwest of Mossul. that Kurdish camp than I dreamed could still watched him, two women came down, outside the walled city, toward the south, plants and rosettes, be found in all Arabia. And all night the carrying skins aiready blown up, and fol-uproar outside kept up. Donkeys fought, lowed the old man's course across the sul Tigris; somehow they seemed to keep the bobbing skins easily balanced under their bodies, and thus supported swam slowly, without tiring.

> And all up and down the riverbanks were hundreds of round-limbed Kurdish women, washing clothes. There must have been half a thousand, all shouting, plunging and wringing a multitude of garments. With skirts tucked high above their knees and no sign of yashmak or veil, they were a noisy, asy-going set, dispelling the illusion that in the East all women are secluded or eternally draped from head to foot.

Long strings of pack donkeys, driven by noisy, swearing Kurdish muleteers, came down to the river to drink, and fusillades of jocular abuse passed between these ruffians and the washwomen. Higher up the river bank, and all along the waterfront, ran a long row of coffeeshops, dance halls and other resorts. Till late at night these places are running full blast, the din of tomto native fiddles and the harsh voices of the painted women who dance and sing, making amusement for the men of Mossul. They like excitement, these Kurds and Arabs, and crude and amateurish as their methods see to us, they have never seen anything better and hence are pleased. It was to this sam hellward locality that Jonah was sent to nstrate with the wicked folk of Nineveh. And if the good old Prophet should from his grave, which stands just across from Mossul, and walk along the waterfront of this wild town some Saturday night, he would find a lot of unfinished busi-left over from his previous efforts. In the country about Mossul are many old nasteries, and in the city itself are churches of the Chaldean, Armenian and Jacobite sects. For many generations the Roman Catholics have pushed missionary work in and around Mossul. The Dominican with their schools and printing presses, have done much to enlighten the people. Arabic is still the common language, with a fair measure of Kurdish; but many of the younger men have come in contact with the Dominican fathers speak French. The Russians, Germans, French and British all have Consular agents at Mossul, all of whom are under the direction of the Consulates at Bagdad. A colony of some 5000 Jews live at Mossul, and practically control the extensive caravan trade with Aleppo. Jonah has been raised to the rank of a saint; Mohammedans and Christians unite in honoring St. George and Jonah, whom they call "Yunus." A leaning minaret, like "Pisa's Leaning Miracle," stands near Mossul's main mosque; Nur-ed-Din is said to have built this minaret on the site of the chapel of the Forty Martyrs. The city is also the home of many of the Babi sect, and in the hills north of town is found the last remnant of the notorious Yezidis, or devil worshipers. A few years ago in a fanatical man hunt these mysterious people chased through the whole of North Mesopo tamia and shot down like wild beasts. A strange feature of their creed is that no one shall speak the name of the devil. The forces of evil are stronger than those of good, the Yezidis say, and so they worship evil forces. They have no book, and cry out gainst those religions whose tenets have been set down in print by the hand of man. So mysterious are their rites, and so closely have they guarded the secret of their real belief and practises, that little is known regarding them. One or two travelers tell re-markable stories of the panic and hysterical fear into which these strange people are thrown at the mere mention of the word "Shaytan," or devil. When the war of extermination was on against them a few years ago, one of the favorite methods of tormenting a Yezidi prisoner was to whis-per the forbidden word in his ear.

Mossul is the Turkish capital of the vilavet of the same name, and is the headquarters of an extensive garrison kept for use against surrounding Arab tribes. It was on a country road, and he inquired of a passing negro if he knew of a doctor thereabouts. He was told a "Dr. Brown" lived at the cross-road. He had the chauffeur drive to although he saw nothing to indicate a physician's residence; in fact, a stable was rather prominently situated near the front of the premises. However, he asked for Dr. Brown, who came out and said "he reck-oned he could fix him up" when the nature of the injury was explained. An application of "first aid" remedies soon had the Senator ready to resume his journey, and he barmaid draw a mug of foaming ale.

"Oh, they all wear a string of bracelets, and they're strong on hair puffs. But they're all right—a barmaid over here is just as much respected as a stenographer or a clerk."

"Yet the men all talk to her," for two men were lounging over the bar in a leisurely conversation.

"Sure, she talks to the customers-that's part of her job. But no Englishman ever gets fresh with a barmaid. She wouldn't stand for it."
"Oh, Warren, look! What a beauty!" as a huge maltese jumped down from the bar and stalked majestically across the saw-

"Oh, you dear, you dear!" stroking the sleek fur. "Tve got a Pussy Purr-Mew at home—but she's not so heavy as you." "Put it down! You don't want that dirty cat in your lap."

"She's not dirty! You're a beautiful clean pussy cat, aren't you?"

The cat purred loudly and dug her claws through Helen's skirt as a further expression of content.

"Pardon me, sir, may I see this?"
The man at the next table reached for the paper Warren had laid aside.
"Help yourself," cordially.
There was an unmistakable American twang to his accent when a little later he returned the paper with a sociable: "Well, you can't get much news out of these English papers. They've got the press pretty well bottled up."

"Yes, they're not giving out any more than they can help."
"Been on the continent?"
"No," Warren reached for a match, "just here in London"

"Huh! that was a lot of hot air he gave us. They're all blowing about the big letof credit they couldn't use, Well, ready to go?"

"It's a shame to disturb her," reluctantly lifting the heavy, sleepy cat from her lap.
"Darned shame. Want to stay and nurse her all night?" Outside, there was almost a wintry tinge n the chill damp air.

"Oh, I love that place!" Helen turned to look back at the dim light from the wrought-iron lantern. "Let's not forget where it is." where it is.

"Hold on there!" Warren stopped short under a street lamp and examined his hat. "Great Scott, I've got some other fellow Hd!

They hurried back, but Warren's hat was not there.

"Well, some blooming fool's worn it off—that's all," irritably. "If he brings it back, give him this," and scribbling their hotel address on his card, Warren left it with the barmaid. "Oh, dear, I'd carry that until we get to

"I'd look like a blithering idiot without hat this weather.

"But you might get some scalp disease! They say all kinds of things can be caught that way. Besides, dear, it isn't clean!"

"Well, you're not so all-fired particular, or you wouldn't have nursed that cat. Talk bout germ carriers!"

Helen, sensing his growing irritation, made no further protest, but when they reached their room she carefully scrutinized the derby. The initials were "L. E. W.," and the maker G. Watts, 65 Fleet street, London, E. C.

"Dear, lift that down," pointing to the steamer-roll on top of the wardrobe.
"What for?"

"Your traveling cap is in there."
"Well, what of it?"

"Why, you'll have to wear something in the morning until you can buy a hat.

"Why won't I?" belligerently.
"With that greasy leather band inside?
Just look at it!"

"Well, I'm not going to blow in any twelve shillings for a new hat. Under-stand? Now let up about it. Here, sew on this button," tossing her the vest he had just taken off.

While Warren undressed, Helen got out her traveling work box, in hurt, resentful silence. Surely in this she was right—he ought not to wear that hat; it might be filled with germs.

"See here! I'm tired of disgorging this bed every night." Warren yanked off the heavy bolster and the two extra pillows. "Can't you make 'em take off this stuff and "I did speak to the maid, but she said they belong to this room and she didn't have any place else to put them."

"Well, you tell her to find a place, or I'll fre them out in the hall."

"Very well, dear, I'll speak to her again," conciliatorily, as she put away the work box and hung his vest over a chair.

A moment later there was a loud knock

"Who the devil's that?" growled Warren, tying with a jerk the cords of his bathrobe and shuffling over to answer it.

It was a beliboy with his hat. The gentleman's waiting downstairs, sir, He says he's very sorry he made the mistake and would you send his down, sir?"

When the boy had gone, Warren slamme the door, and flung his own hat on the table. There, hope you're satisfied. But I can tell you one thing—if that Johnnie hadn't turned up with my hat I'd have worn his the rest of the trip-even if it was a size too small.

"But why—" began Helen.
"Why?" savagely. "Because of your infernal meddling—that's why! If that hatband was solled, I could see it—couldn't I? But, no, you've got to go up in the air you've got to manage everything. Didn't dream of wearing that hat tomorrow till you started to row about it."

Helen, who was letting down her hair, bit her lip with an air of patient endurance that irritated him all the more. "That's right," raspingly. "Now feel hurt and pity yourself. That's always your role! But, take it from me, if you'd an ounce of brains you wouldn't be forever butting in. A man wants to manage his own affairs once in a while!"

Poultry Culture in the Southwest-A Plea for Boston B

By Henery W. Kruckeberg.

NOTE—Short articles of a practical nature are cordially solicited from breeders and fanciers, relating their experiences with poultry, giving their successes as well as failures. The writer will be glad, in so far as lies in his power, to answer inquiries of public interest bearing on any phase of an enlightened poultry culture, such as feeding and management, disease and its prevention, market conditions, fancy points, etc. The co-operation of utility breeders and fanciers is cordially solicited, to the end that the best thought and practice in an enlightened poultry culture may find a healthy expression in these columns.

Concerning Eggs. FACTS ABOUT HEN FRUIT AND ITS CLASSIFICATION.

IKE a good ripe shipping orange that is never any better than at the moment it is clipped from the tree, so as egg is never any better than at the time it is iaid—a condition that some people evidently do not appreciate in the handling and marketing of hen fruit. The expression "fresh eggs" means (if it means anything) only those that have been laid immediately before harvesting, and hence not impaired in quality. In this connection the San Fran-Dairy Exchange grades eggs under seven counts as follows: Extras, firsts, se onds, thirds, selected pullets, dirties No. 1

Fresh California Extras.-Color entirely white and reasonably clean; size, rea ably un'form; 85 per cent. shall be No. 1 stock, quality good, sound, sweet and full, The remainder may be defective in strength and fullness, but must be sweet. Double-yolked eggs are nothing but twin of the feather. eggs. It may be hereditary. Some think it due to over-stimulating foods, but as it is an occurrence with both lean and fat hens. this is hardly tenable.

Hens that produce eggs with poor shells should be sent to the block. Misshapen pecimens do not grade up, and so vitiate the value of the product.

Thin, watery eggs are due to an overfeeding of sloppy foods, or a too heavy vegetable diet, or the hens are in poor condition. Change of diet and better the surroundings, and the trouble will often right itself.

Pale yolks indicate a lack of green food and of fat. Pale yolks are more predominant at the season when green foods are scarce than otherwise. Under California conditions the thoughtful breeder can always have a supply of green food for his

Chasing and rough handling, fright and nervous ter when the bird is in full lay and every blood ressel and nerve is under full pressure, will produce disarrangements. Afford a quiet environment, lessen the feeding of stimulating foods, and especially of all condiments, and do not overfeed.

Dropping eggs from the perches is the work of a bad actor—the egg is invariably broken and eaten by some member of the flock, and so the egg-eating habit is intro-duced. Some breeders lay it to overfeeding, and as a remedy give Epsom salts, a tea-spoonful to every pint of water. Afford acs to grit and oyster shell. If only one or two hens are guilty isolate them from the flock in a pen with low perches supplie with a bed of litter and straw. Give liberally of green food.

In California the white-shelled egg is preferred to the brown, though in eating values there is no difference. The former are, however, candled more rapidly, owing to their greater transparency. In any event, eggs should be carefully graded not only as to condition and size, but also as to color of shell. To mix whites and browns is to de stroy market values to just that extent.

dvanced breeder in poultry to account for the bare-neck fowl that has been more or less in evidence in portions of Europe. Experiments carried on at the station of Experimental Evolution (Carnegie Institution) by C. B. Davenport (Journal of Heredity.) throw some light on the persistence of this characteristic in breeding these birds. Mated to each other they gave a few fullfeathered chicks, but about three-fourths were bare-necked. Mated to ordinary fowl, about half of the offspring had naked necks -there was very little indication of imperfection of dominance. It appears, consequently, that the naked neck is a typical dominant and in accordance with current interpretations, one may say that there is a factor in the "Bare Necks" which inter-feres with the development of the neck feathers. Some years ago it was pointed out that the condition of clean shank is dominant over that of feathered shank in poultry. In the light of the later result one may generalize and infer that the typical ondition of the fowl is this, that every skin plate bears a feather; and that if any portion of the skin is without feathers it is due to a specific inhibitor to the develop-ment of the feather germ in that region. Cf come this, supply ground oyster shell and these inhibitors there are probably a numdo not overlook a supply of grit. So far as experimental breeding has gone, it seems probable that the inhibitor is of the nature of an anti-enzyme which interferes in a given area with the development of enzymes that induce the formation Timely Operations During October.

In California this is the month dividing the dry weather of summer from that of the rainy or winter season: it is also that period of the year when the agricultural classe have in mind the preliminary arrangements for another planting and growing seas With the poultrymen it is a transition pe riod. Much young stock has not yet reached maturity; there is still a lingering number of birds that have not been fully decided upon; winter preparations are still matters of consideration subject to final decision and action. To the experienced these several operations are not only known but usu ally observed and carried out; to the begin ner and novice they are often a matter of some indifference, to which attention may be directed just at this time.

With the approach of the rainy season it is the part of wisdom to guard against damp-ness. See to it that the houses are all rainproof and that moisture does not penetrate at the bottom, especially if you use house without floors. A good plan is to bank earth against the outsides.

Whitewashing is another operation that can be observed to good advantage; it only renders the houses sanitary and of bet ter appearance, but it also conserves the wood. A good recipe for a whitewash that will wear like paint is the one in use by the Federal government on its lighthouses. another portion of this page are given the government and two other recipes for the making and application of whitewash.

March and April-hatched pullets should commence laying this month, and it will be well to get them into comfortable quarters

[Philadelphia Record:] The average uyer of poultry obtains just what he pays for as a rule, no more, no less. Yet when over-advertised stock is sold there is a kick by the purchasers, and in a measure they are to blame. It takes extra care and money to raise cockerels for breeding, and those of any merit cannot be sold at a profit for market prices. Few poultry raisers are in the business for love alone There is too much haphazard-bred stock in the country now, and the average beginner seems to think that the cheap stock is as good as the more expensive until he has had the xperience of this stock on his own place. A year has been lost, with the money in addition, in the maintaining of this stock, for it costs just as much per lowl to keep scrub stock as that of a higher grade. Purse stock for which a fair price is asked, and the chances are largely in favor of some thing that will prove profitable.

[New York Sun:] I would not advise any woman to start poultry keeping unless she is willing to adopt simple modern methods of care and feeding. I would have her plan her poultry work in a way to insure the most profit from the least time spent. There is such a difference in the quality of home produced eggs and home raised poultry as compared with what you ordinarily get at the store or market that few folks go back to the purchased product after once testing the real thing. Many a boy and girl has become interested in hens and chickens because of the start with the good mother in the home. In fact the boy and girl are usually the helpers from the start, and they make good ones. Children like live stock, and no better can be had than the Leghorn egg machines or the general purpose kinds, as the Rhode Island Red, Wyandotte or Plymouth Rock. Often the rearing of the chickens becomes the work of the youngsters of the family. It all depends on the start and how the work is planned.

[Indianapolis News:] It requires a p fect system of ventilation and personal attention to keep the air in the poultry house as fresh as it is on the outside. It will, therefore, often be found advisable to have quite a few windows covered with muslin to regulate the air in different kinds of weather. Extremes in temperature can be considerably modified by careful ventilation. It is important that the poultry house be kept cool in summer and dry and comfortable in winter. There is no question but that diffused ventilation through muslin curtains has been found to overcome the difficulty of dampness resulting from the condensation of moisture of breath of fowls. Much of the dampness in poultry houses in winter comes from that condensation. The warm air exhaled from the lungs is heavily charged with moisture, and this, coming in contact with the cool wails and roof, is condensed, and the cool wants and root, is condensed, and in freezing weather appears as hoar frost. When the house warms up this melts and drops to the floor. This can be largely overcome by plenty of ventilation, and plenty of the right kind means open-front houses, with as little glass as possible.

[Baltimore American:] Keep them tame Don't have scarey birds. Teach them to have confidence. One can tell the difference in a moment between a tame and well-kept flock and one that is in constant excitement.

I never saw better developed Leghorn pullets than I saw in a neighbor's yard, and they were so tame that they could be easily picked up. They were tamed from chick up.

[New York Press:] The owner of a small flock of ducks designed primarily for home use need not be influenced by these objections, and such will find the Muscovy a most satisfactory breed. A small flock, when kept under natural conditions, will give good re-turns. The adult birds are bold and fear less, strong, hardy and vigorous. They will in large measure rustle for themselves and will hatch and rear a goodly number of ducklings each year without much assistance on the part of their owner. Their striking and attractive appearance makes them an ornament to the poultry plant or farm, and their meaty, rich flavored carcasses make about as fine table poultry as one could desire.

In ornament to the poultry plant or farm, and their meaty, rich flavored carcasses manufactured?" he asked.

[Memphis Commercial-Appeal:] The great loss in this country is from the fact that the average farmer sells the carcass after."

without fattening and sustains a big loss In ten days' time you can place nearly a nd of flesh on chickens which will greatly enhance the selling price as well as make you a profit on the feed used in the net gain. You have got to learn this lesson all the way through your farm work. Do not dump an unfinished product on the market but finish it and learn to go into the market and sell your stuff and quit swapping farm produce for goods. This is an antiquated method used only by the farm classes and dates back to the dawn of civilization. Money should be the medium of exchange of the farmer as well as the banker, merchant or any other business man.

[Memphis Commercial Appeal:] Make hens profitable. To be profitable they must be producers. They must produce enough hen fruit to more than cover their cost. One may keep a dozen or more hens and bear loss, but if one keeps two, three or five hun-dred, what then? The business principle is the same, whether you are keeping ten or 10,000. If there is a leak it should be stopped. The way to do this is to breed producers. Each season there is a large de-mand for young pullets from two to four months old, and later in the season for ma tured pullets ready to lay, or laying, and a good business can result from raising this class of stock. The demand for this class of stock will be large this year, due to the short crop of poultry hatched, and especially is this true of the early hatches.

The "Medaille Militaire."

[Baltimore American:] The "Medaille day by the French government upon King Albert, in recognition of the manner in which he battled at the head of his army to prevent the Germans from invading France via Belgium may be regarded as the Gallic equivalent of the Congressional Medal of the United States, of the German Or-der of the Iron Cross, of the St. George's ss of Russia and of the Victoria Cross of England. Privates and non-commissioned predominate largely in its ranks. When it is worn by an officer it indicates that he has commanded an army in the field, and has rendered services so great that even the highest grade of the Legion of Honor would be an inadequate reward.
Unlike the Order of the Legion of Honor which was created by Napoleon I., the Medaille Militaire was brought into existence in January, 1852, by his nephew, Napoleon III. The insignia consists of a small silver medal, on which the feminine head of the republic appears, surrounded by a thick wreath of silver laurel. The medallion is surmounted by a small silver trophy, consisting of a cuirass, a couple of cannon, a couple of swords and an anchor, and is worn on the left breast, suspended by a piece of yellow ribbon bordered with green.

The only man whom I have ever known to wear this medal without having won it on the field of battle was the late King Edward. When a boy of 15 he had been present at Paris when Napoleon III was making his first distribution of the 'Medaille Militaire' to the wounder soldiers who had returned from the war in the Crimea, and who had been mentioned in the dispatches for ex-ceptional feats of heroism under fire. The ng British heir apparent was wonder young British heir apparent was womenfully impressed by the spectacle; so much so, that as a memento of the occasion the Emperor bestowed one of the medals upon

Today King Albert of Belgium is the only monarch to possess this double distinction.

Would Correct Mistake.

[Philadelphia Public Ledger:] An official of the Department of Agriculture connected with the Bureau of Chemistry tells of a dealer in Ohio who was accused of selling a wine made of chemicals. He was haled into court, found guilty and fined.

When the matter had been adjusted the "How did you know that my wine was Motor Ambulances in London.

[Washington Post:] During recent years street accidents in London have grown to such an alarming extent that the county council is at its wits' end to devise some means of protecting the pedestrian. The fatal accidents to two American travelers in the West End last season resulted in the provision of special refuges at all dangerous crossings, but even this safeguard has not reduced the ever-growing

The council has now placed at different points in the metropolis a dozen moto ambulances, and a systematic appeal is being made to secure the co-operation with the police of 4000 telephone subscribers in all parts of the town.

The subscribers are pledged to permit any uniformed policeman to enter their houses and use the telephone for the purpose of calling an auto ambulance. On the gates or doors of these houses the council will place a metal square with the letter "A" in the center, indicating to the police where a telephone is at their disposal.

good food and bad teeth. The results are summarized by the Journal of the Ameri-against 27 per cent. from very poor homes. This is accounted for by the fact that the coarser food eaten by the poor children gives their teeth more work, and hence eeps them clean and strong. It is also suggested that the poor are able to give their children fewer sweets, and only those or boiled-sugar variety. Sweets made of boiled sugar break up clean in the mouth, whereas the caramels and chocolates eaten by better-off boys and girls tend to cling round the teeth and form a nidus of fermentation.

Dr. Sims Wallace, late dental surgeon to the London Hospital, states that there are in this country about 21,000,000 teeth in a state of ruin through eating sweets, and Adhesive Plaster as an Emergency Dressing. urges the adoption of a diet containing farinaceous food in a form which will stimulate mastication, as brown bread, and also the eating of fresh fruit at the conclusion of a meal. By means of the fruit the teeth are cleansed. The best fruit for this purpose is probably the apple, which, if eaten at the end of a meal, leaves the mouth fresh and physiologically clean, Sore Eyes and Sunlight.

It is a common observation that a certain number of persons who sleep in bedre with curtains raised and exposed to day light awake in the morning with a smart ing, or burning, sensation in the eyes. They place the blame for this upon the light.

In point of fact the fault usually lies in the eyes themselves. Some perso unusually sensitive eyes, such as albinos may be affected by the early morning light; but as a rule the smarting sensation of the eyes in the morning is an indication that omething is wrong with the eyes, or the system. It is believed by many observers that "rheumatic" persons are frequently affected, as well as those with eye defects. But in any event the daylight should not be blamed for the eye symptoms. Indeed, day-light is a remedy for, rather than the cause in crowded city districts, where children frequently sleep in rooms that are abso lutely dark, persistent eye troubles are com mon. Frequently these conditions resist all ordinary methods of treatment, but yield when the child is placed in a light bedroom. As this sort of bedroom is not always available, the fire escape is often requisitioned as sleeping-porch.

Sait as a Counter-Irritant.

Salt is a violent irritant to raw surfaces And yet; when used in the right proportion salt water is less irritating to an injured eye than plain water.

It has long been a rule among n to bathe an eye that has been injured by a bit of lime, or mortar, with a weak solution of vinegar; and to use a bath of dilute soapsuds for an injury caused by acids This is done with the idea that the acid of the vinegar will neutralize the alkali of the lime, or the alkali of the soapsuds neutral ize the acid. But it doesn't work out that way in practice. A far better form of treat ment is to put the patient on his back, and pour plenty of lukewarm water between the well-opened lids as quickly as possible.

Curiously enough, this lukewarm water bath is made much less irritating by the addition of a little salt. The exact proportion for this is an even teaspoonful of salt to a quart of water.

glasses. Glasses are inconvenient. But so, also, is blindness.

A roll of adhesive plaster, which may be carried in the vest pocket, is a valuable addition to an emergency outfit. Take the swells at once and becomes exquisitely tender. The penalty of using the limb in this condition, without support, is increased swelling, delayed recovery, and possibly ermanent weakness.

But if the ankle is strapped at once with strips of adhesive plaster about one inch wide, placed alternately horizontally around the heel and along the sides of the foot, and vertically under the foot and well up the sides of the leg, using enough to cover the whole surface, the injured foot may be used at once, and with very little pain. Moreover, recovery will be hastened by this kind of treatment

Preferably the dressing should be applied by an expert, for sprains are serious injuries. But in an emergency, such as might arise on a hunting or camping trip, it may be applied so as to be effective by any one By keeping in mind that the foot should be held flexed as much as possible, that the strap should each be drawn tight as it is put on, and that plenty of straps should ed, it is possible to put on a dressing that will save much time, pain, and trouble later.

Postponing Old Age.

For fifty years or more we have concen rated our efforts to cure the diseases and better the conditions of children. As a result, infant nortality and the mortality of early childhood ve been reduced tremendously. But there ing effort in behalf of the aged. Had there life might also have been longthened.

The author of the new book entitled "Geriatrics" (treatment of the diseases of old age,) previously mentioned in this magazine, suggests a reason for this un-intentional neglect. "It required the pen of a Dickens to rouse the public conscience to the neglect of the dependent child, and the diseases peculiar to childhood," says the author. But there has been no Dicke to plead the cause of the neglected old And so we find that at the present time "there is no organization taking up the scientific study of the aged, not a journal devoted to their welfare, no movement of any kind intended for their betterment." Wherefore this writer has taken up the good work himself.

He has demonstrated by careful observation that old persons who lose interest in the activities of life become easy victims of disease. The inactivity of their minds makes their bodies inactive, and therefore less resistant. The aged persons who retain their interest in life also retain greater bodily resistance to disease.

Persistence of Early Habits.

Prof. Ernst Haeckel, whose life has been an almost continuous series of great achievements, attributes his activity to his a comearly training. "My mother." he says, would never permit me to be idle for a moment. If I stood at the window day-dreaming, she would always urge me to be up and doing. 'Work or play,' she would urge, 'but do not stand idle.' Through this reiternition, physical activity became lifelong habit with me, and work almost a necessity of my being. If I have been able to accomplish my full share of labors, this is the reason. I am never idle, and I scarcely know the meaning of ennui.

The Food Value of Preserves.

A recent step taken by Great Britain to is a m insure a supply of preserves to her fighting men indicates the value of these substances as foods. The New York Medical in the w Journal makes this comment:

"It is reported that an embargo has been g effort in behalf of the aged. Had there pen, it is possible that the final span of manufacture of which Great Britain is famous. The jams are undoubtedly being saved for use in the army, where they will be highly appreciated and consumed with advantage.

By Edward B. Warman, A. B.

The word "calories" is one with which physiologists love to conjure, and the average person understands it about as clearly as he does the tricks of the stage conjurer. Nor may I be able to elucidate matters enough for you to see through the trick, but I shall make a try at it. It is not, however, so essential that you grasp the technicality of it as it is for you to make a practical application of it regarding diet.

A "calorie" is a unit of heat—the amount of heat required to raise the temperature of one gram of water (one-eighth part of ounce, apothecary's weight; one-sixteenth of an ounce, avoirdupois weight,) one degree let from the standpoint of centigrade, or:1.8 degree Fahrenheit.

As this means nothing to the average person, let us make it understandable in its ap-plication to food. In this regard the word "calorie" is used because the nutritive value an ordinary breath spletcly filled nor are ded by an ordinary of a serving of food cannot be properly ex-pressed by bulk in pints or ounces, but by pressed by bulk in pints or ounces, but by the amount of heat given off when burned in the human body. antity of

The quantity of food necessary to main fers, of course, with the amount of work required and with the demands of the body for growth. The full heat-value of foods is never extracted from the albuminous sub-stances only; such foods as eggs, milk, meat, etc., that are used to replace the body substances lost by wear and tear—but must be drawn from the fuel-formers—the fats and carbohydrates (sugars and starches.)

Yet it is customary for the average man to eat more on Sunday than any other day of the week. While he rests his body and mind from physical and mental labor he overworks his digestive organs.

When an engine is in the roundhouse, it doesn't need the fuel that it does when it is on the road; in fact, it needs none. In the human engine the fire does not go out, but less fuel is necessary. If the one who eats heartily of more or less heavy foods six days a week would eat nothing but fruit (in season) on the seventh day, he would live longer, live better and go to work Monday with a cleaner body and a clearer brain Then think what a change it would be for

The heat that the body generates in a day -on an average—has been found to be (in the case of a sedentary worker) approximately 2000 calories. To those who try out the 2000 calorie ration, there will be some who will declare it hopelessly inadequate, but men of vigorous body and of a keen and energetic mind maintain health on fewer than 2000 calories, and they radiate energy and health, with the mind constantly on tap. Yet there are those doing laborious outdoor work who may be able to take care of 3600

Whereas, in hasty eating, a large proportion of the food is not digested and cannot, therefore, be utilized. These 2000 calories for the day should be

You can figure this for your-self to ascertain how many calories you are using. For example, one ounce of protein yields, approximately, 116.2 calories; one ounce of fats, 262.85 calories; one ounce of carbohydrates, 116.2 calories,

Dietetic Value of Apples,

Now that the apple season is on, it is well ider the benefits derived from a free use of this luscious fruit. Apples are good, wholesome food at any time—at morning, noon or night. I know this statement is contrary to the familiar saying that "fruit is golden in the morning, silvern at noon leaden at night."

Fruit is golden at any time if ripe and not eaten in conjunction with any other food. I know of nothing better, just before retiring, than a good, juicy apple, unless it be, per haps, two good juicy apples. They thor oughly disinfect the mouth, excite the action of the liver, aid the kidney secretions, pre vent calculus, relieve indigestion, furnish more phosphoric acid (for the brain) in an easily-digested form than any other fruit, and in addition thereto, promote sound sleep.

You should eat the paring, indigestible it is, if you wish to get the mineral salts.

Masticate it thoroughly, and the digestive juices of the stomach will do the rest.

Be Your Own Judge.

When anything recommended by me doe not agree with you, does not fit your particular case as a remedial agent or as a hygienic measure, reject it, no matter by what authority given. We can only generalize, not individualize. I have reference, especially, to what I have said regarding paraffin oil. Do not be misled by the "answer" to "query" on this subject as appeared in a recent number of the Health Culture Magazine. It would be well to remember that this prescription was not given by a layman but by a physician and surgeon of inter national reputation; and this, after it had proved efficacious in thousands of cases, be sides a two years' trial by himself.

But I want to warn readers against any imposition or possible ignorance on the part of the drug clerk in selling an inferior article not fit for internal use. It should be as clear as water (clean water,) coloriess (not yellow,) and tasteless, Tablets, inscribed, in gold, silver, copper and lead were also found in the palace of the King of Nineveh." The Frenchmen unearthed the library, the bake shop and even the bathroom of the old King. But many of these first antiquities were lost in the river Tigris when a raft on which they were being conveyed down to sea was accidentally

But it's all gone now. Ninevah is not even a memory with the wild, ignorant tribes who roam the desert of old Assyria. At one edge of its ruins stands the little village of "Nebi Yunus," and the reputed tomb of Jonah. The identity of Jonah seems alone preserved—and he was one of the least in

The City and the House Beautiful.

By Ernest Braunton.

For 1915. ARBOREAL FLORAL AND BEAUTIFICATION POSSIBLE.

T COMES as a rude shock to those en gaged in the work to learn that a large portion of the expected funds may not be used for beautifying Los Angeles county. This may not, however, seriously interfere with much of the simpler work. This department has consistently stood for the planting of highway trees and the sowing of seeds in parkway strips and on vacant lots and of course in the gardens everywhere There have been some schemes proposed, and accepted, which do not at all appeal to the City Beautiful man, just as there have been highway plantings that do not mee the approval of those who know even very little about trees and their needs. It may be that we shall lose little, so far as road side beauty is concerned, if in the end less money than was contemplated, is spent upon this phase of the work.

Nevertheless, the 1915 committee need all the funds they will be permitted to use, and if these are not forthcoming the work will be seriously crippled. The school work outlined is of itself of the highest importance, not only for 1915 and those now directly interested, but for all time and all to one male. The latter fruits like a pine people yet to come. For years this depart- cone while the former, in size and shape, is ment has persistently and consistently advised the planting of seeds of both annuals and perennials, not only California wild flowers, but those known to thrive under local conditions, no matter where obtained County Supervisors may still carry out extensive highway planting. though now too late to make much of an impression upon the 1915 visitors, but nothing will more strongly appeal to residents and visi-tors alike than a wealth of California wild flowers along every highway, and there is no suggestion of temporary effect, as would be true of some schemes quite favorably sidered by the official body. Could our native wild flowers be thickly sown, everywhere space is available, with a generous mixture of sorts from the lowly Baby Blueeyes up to the taller blue lupines, with vast stretches and zones of California native poppy in variety of color, the whole country could be made beautiful at very little cost, not alone for the year 1915, but for all time.

Wild Flower Gardens.

T IS now time seriously to consider the planting of annuals and perennials native to California and countries of similar cli-mates. While the writer strongly favors the use of seeds of California wild flowers there are scores of sorts equally easy to grow under local conditions.

Nearly all members of the poppy family fall into this class and there is one lowly plant from South Africa, a daisy, that is not surpassed in beauty, effectiveness or hardiness by any annual we may grow. Its name is the hardest thing about the plant we have to deal with-Dimorphotheca aurantiaca though the latter name is but one form of the specific name of the common orange and means orange in color. We should then call this plant "Orange daisy," and all seeds men will recognize what you mean by this

The writer is somewhat inclined to criticise botanists who give such jaw-breaking names to plants; for though himself a botanist of some repute, it is apparent that such long names are equally hard for the scientists of all nations. America's greatest botanist, Dr. Asa Gray, named a Southern California plant Lepidospartum squamatum, and though the writer can handle it as easily as a word of brt two letters, it appears very for-midable to one at the first encounter. It is hoped that someone, or ones, may be offiempowered to overhaul pl cially empowered to overhaul plant nomenclature, a committee for each country or for each tongue spoken, and give every known plant a common name as easy (and as expressive) for the masses as housefly, bulldog, or morning glory.

The Male Sago Palm.

THE proportion of male plants to the fe-male among local sago palms has not been definitely determined by the writer, but he has found at least ten female plants much like a head of cabbage. The ph graph herewith reproduced was taken by Thomas McD. Potter of a male plant growing in his garden at No. 1135 South Alva-rado street, Los Angeles. Since flowering it has put forth a fine set of new leaves.

Fresno Floral Festival.

FRESNO'S first flower and plant exhibit from all viewpoints, a decided success, and all entrants have assured the management that they will furnish still larger and finer exhibits next year. One peculiar fact brought out by the exhibit is that Fresno, in spite of a drier atmosphere and greater summer heat, produces better midsummer roses than do we of Los Angeles. The foliage of roses grown at the Roeding residence, a few miles from Fresno, had all the appearance and perfection of the best of the gli sent down to the show from San Francis While the exhibits were not so large, varied or numerous as common in Pasadena flowe

Street Trees in Fresno.

WHEN one gets north of the Tehachepi Mountains be finds more and more of deciduous trees, in either gardens, parks, or parkways. In all cities and towns this is quite noticeable to an Angeleno. Too many places use cottonwoods, but Fresno luckily has but few, choosing rather to use the elms, maples, etc., better and longer-lived trees. One peculiarity the writer no-ticed. Camphor trees in Frenso have smaller and less smooth leaves than those farther south. The leaves are not so broad or flat, inclined to be wavy, and present their edges to the sun rather than their flat surface. All to the sun rather than their has burner too this is a natural provision to prevent too rapid evaporation through the leaf pores or stomata. The camphor tree has to economize on moisture when in California, for it is native to parts of China, Japan, and largely of Formosa, where the annual rainfall is very great.

MISS MULLEN.

M ISS MULLEN was lonely. She had been lonely for a long time, so long that she was almost getting used to it. At first, after her breakdown, friends and relatives had fairly loaded her with flowers, books and well-meant calls, but now that she was supposed to be quite well again and not in need of attention she found herself strangely isolated. She had been a business woman for so many years that she had gradually relinquished her place in so cial circles, and now that the office had been forbidden, her intercourse with man-kind was practically limited to the butcher

Miss Mullen's breakfast was finished. She piled the dishes neatly, but instead of promptly clearing the table and doing up the morning work like any well-regulated keeper, she went to the open window and pressed the tip of her nose against the screen. The California garden was sweet and fresh and invited a longer inspection so Miss Mullen remained at the window Pretty soon the door of the next hous slammed, a cheery whistle broke the morn ing stillness, and the man next door strode off from his solitary bachelor domicile to make the 8:05 car, late as usual. Miss Mul-len shrank a little behind the curtains, but did not relinquish her post. She watched him swing his broad shoulders across the lawn and disappear half-running down the walk. She liked his healthy, independent stride, and she envied him his prospective day's work. A year ago she, too, had used to slam the front door in her haste to make the 8:05 car, and had hurried off light-heartedly to her work downtown, while now,-well, there was really nothing to do at preent but wash the dishes.

She went absently about her task, and had just got to the cooking utensils when the washerwoman's little boy trudged around the house drawing his squeaking cart piled high with bundles of clean clothes. Hungry for human companionship, Miss Mullen lured him in with the promise of a

"Isn't that nice! You must bring one of them to show me some time. And how's your mother?"

"Oh, she's sick."

"Sick! I'm so sorry! Wait a minute and I'll get something for you to take her." Miss Mullen hastened to her pantry, and returned with two little glasses which she tied carefully in a paper sack.

"Tell her this is guava jelly that I made last month," she directed, "and don't drop it. If the can't eat it now she'll like it later. She's not very sick?"

"No, she ain't got peumonia, but she says there's a pain where she keeps her liver."

"Well, tell her she must send word if I can do anything. When you come for the wash next Monday, Dicky, I'll have some more cookies for you,-nice ones with rai-

Miss Mullen did not consider the doubtful wisdom of feeding a small boy cookies between meals, she was too eager to have the monotony of her long morning broken by onversation with a creature of her kind. She finished the dishes, and then broug

As she gazed meditatively at the article of apparel, something sewed inside the neck caught her eye. She picked it up and examined it more closely. It was a bit of tape with the letters "J. L." woven into it, when it occurred to her that this was a stilly, cowardly course to pursue.

"As if I wanted to pretend I didn't know knife. When mother is sick. Now that wouldn't do."

As she gazed meditatively at the article of apparel, something sewed inside the neck into her mind—the name of the man next door was John Lawrence!

"Whatever shall I do!" she groaned. "I simply cannot face a strange man with a pair of silk pajamas over my arm! But neither can I bother Dicky and his sick

If only there were a housekeeper, or any woman, next door, the restoration might be asily managed.

easily managed.

Miss Mullen did not drop into a chair, she never did when faced by difficulties, she merely stood a little firmer and rapped sharply on whatever hard substance happened to be nearest her. It presented itself this time in the form of the dining-table, and she has a rank take on its after. She and she beat a rapid tattoo on its edge. She knew practically nothing of Mr. Lawrence except that he had a pleasant face and broad shoulders, and a particularly pleasing whistle. The broad shoulders loomed up in a formidable way when it became a question of presenting them with intimate de tails of a gentleman's wardrobe.

"However," she decided, after a moment of serious consideration, "my duty is quite clear. I must take the pajamas to Mr. Lawrence this evening, after he come home. I might leave them outside the door but it would be a sin to trust such a sweet creation on the porch.

She gathered up the dread garments grace fully, and advanced with dignified bearing to the china cupboard. It might be as well to rehearse a little.

"Good evening, Mr. Lawrence," she said, looking the china cupboard bravely in the face, "I have here something which accidentally came into my possession, and which I have reason to believe belongs to you

The cupboard returned such a glassy stare to her embarrassed look that she retired crestfallen and abashed. Undiscouraged, however, she approached the sideboard as a less imposing piece of furniture, and couched her message in more promising language

"Good evening," she began, rather timidty of the sideboard which suggested Mr. Lawrence's broad shoulders, "I believe you are Mr. Lawrence, are you not? I am your next door neighbor, and I am bringing you something which the washerwoman's little boy left at my house by mistake."

The result of this venture was more satisfactory, and Miss Mullen went upstairs memorizing her little speech and feeling very nervous. She laid the pajamas on her bed, and as she did so noticed a small hole where a button should have been.

"Goodness," she said, jumping at the pros pect of immediate employment as a relief for her uneasiness, "what a careless man he must be! I suppose I may as well mend it for him."

She set about her self-imposed task energetically. First, she dragged out her piece-bag and searched its contents until she found a bit of silk which would serve admirably as a reinforcement. It required a longer hunt to find a button whose form and color would permit of its close association with the other buttons, and when it was found and sewed securely on, Miss Mullen draped the pajamas over a chair and apostrophized them with severity.

"Now, my friend," she declared, "I hope you will stay at home where you belong and not wander any more into the homes of maiden ladies, to cause them embarrass-

Miss Mullen was not as lonely as usual that afternoon, she talked a good deal to the pajamas; told them what she thought of men in general, and especially men who bought silk clothes and then tore the buttons off them. About 6 o'clock, however, examining the alien garments with critical eyes.

"Women do wear these things," she reflected, and forthwith held half of the outfit up to her own sfim figure, to test the possible femininity. No, its length of sleeve and shoulder arms proclaimed it as undeniably masculine, and Miss Mullen laid it down with a slightly worried expression.

"Out the o'clock, however, in the collect, however, she begged clutching her burden as if fearing to be deprived of it by main force. "I know this isn't according to etiquette, but I'm not an old maid, even if I do happen to be single!"

She hurried away, feeling the dreaded blush already at work, but Mr. Lawrence, with a slightly worried expression. "What a roose I am!" she sooned as she her, laughing.

"Somebody," she thought, "will be completed up the pieces. "Anyhow, he'll have ently she heard a cheerful whistle in the distance and steps on the walk; Mr. Lawrence was coming home. After waiting for what she judged a proper interval, Miss Mullen took her courage, with the pajamas in her hands, and started on her mission She looked hastily in the glass as she passed through the hall, and fluffed up her hair with a practiced touch. She was not plain, and in spite of her recent illness the burden of her twenty-eight years sat lightly

"If I blush," she thought desperately, as she crossed the lawn, "it will be agoniz-

As she went up the steps she saw that it was dark in the house, and wondered if Mr. Lawrence had gone out. A form rose sud-denly from the shadows in the porch, and Miss Mallen jumped.

"I've brought you some clothes that Dicky left in my bundle," Miss Mullen continued a little hurriedly. "I thought they must be yours because of the initials."

"That's good of you," assured the voice eartily. "Won't you sit down out here? heartily. "Won't you sit down out here? It's hot in the house. If you'll wait a minute, I'll bring something which I expect belongs to you. I guess Dicky made a double

He went into the house, snapping on the hall light as he did so, and Miss Mullen was left in a state of horror and agitation. The possibility of Dicky's mother having mixed her washing with Mr. Lawrence's had never occurred to her, and the pajamas had so occupied her attention that she had forgotten to count her clean clothes. What article of feminine wear was now in the crude, masculine hands of her neighbor? She could only wonder with growing apprehen-

"Quite unmended," he replied as he clos the drawer. "Sad state, isn't it? My mer ing woman has moved away, and I haven't been able to replace her. Dicky's mother doesn't do that sort of thing. You will ap-preciate, now, how truly grateful I am for your service."

"Oh, please!" cried Miss Mullen, and with sudden boldness she reopened the drawer and possessed herself of a dozen socks, rapidly picking out mates from the confused

FOR THE EDUCATION OF

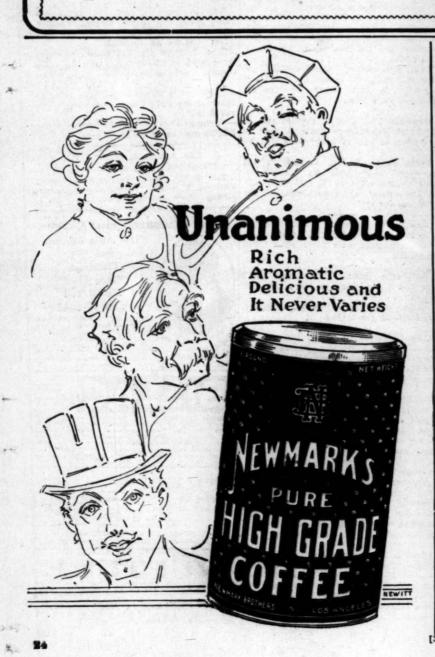

YOUR BOY OR YOUR GI

THERE IS NO NEED TO SEND THE ONE O THE OTHER OUTSIDE THE GOLDEN STAT

> The educational standard maintained by the scho of California-boys' military or denominational scho girls' schools and business colleges, has attracted the attention of teachers throughout the world. Several educators from the European continent have been quietly investigating the courses of study, methods and practices of the leading educational institutions in the State and have expressed surprise at the high degree of efficiency of the instructors and the advanced training of the students in every branch of learning. In California, the methods of the old masters and the sharp, advanced ideas of the new have been combined to thoroughly prepare and perfect the student in his life's work; so, it is preferable in every way to keep the young folks near home.

> Information regarding California's private schools for boys and girls will be sent free on application. State the kind of school and locality you prefer. Address:
